"The habit of saving money, produced by installment payments on Liberty bonds," he said, "will be continued, and much of this new increment will go directly to savings banks. It was surprising to see how money flowed into the banks after the signing of the armistice. This big increase of depositors is an index of the wider distribution of the country's wealth. The high wages brought about by war conditions have helped to create a new army of savers."

Frederic W. Allen, Director of the National War Savings Committee for Greater New York, said the other day that in his belief the people of the United States were getting well up toward the top of the column in the number of savings bank depositors to the thousand of population. When a troubled world has settled down again to the cautious and leisurely pursuit of collecting statistics, in his opinion, this country will be a long way from the foot of the thrift class.

If any one agency should feel the effect of the competition of Liberty Bonds and Thrift Stamps, as a means of getting good interest for one's money, it should be the postal savings banks of the United States. The interest is only 2 per cent. a year, and, if the money is withdrawn in less time, even that is not paid. When the year 1918 ended, there were $148,000,000 in postal savings, held by many thousands of depositors.

Glance, too, at the report of Thomas A. Patten, Postmaster of New York, which shows that at the close of business on Dec. 31, 1918, there was a deposit of $36,138,881 in the postal savings institutions in the Boroughs of Manhattan and the Bronx, an increase of $6,653,209 over the preceding year. The total number of postal savings depositors reached 109,000 in those two districts alone. Many of these depositors were, of course, more recent Americans than most of us, and they had so profound a faith in anything Governmental that they preferred to place at least some of their savings with the Postmaster.

The urge to save comes to the fore when the people wish to have their own homes. In France a sturdy peasantry has gathered the copper sous in iron pots for centuries in order to buy farms and to have and to hold cottages. In this country the inclination to have a foothold on the earth and to sit before one's own hearth beneath one's own rooftree crops out in the building and loan associations. When the United States entered the war the Government demands for steel and other materials checked building of all kinds. There were many subscribers who for a time lost interest in housing and disposed of their shares. In twenty-five States of the Union these organizations are bound together in the United States League of Local Building and Loan Associations. The annual report of the league, recently from the press, shows that in spite of all the demands for saving, from other sources, in the fiscal year of the organization the membership had risen to 3,838,612 holders, an increase of 270,180 over the preceding year, and that the total assets had reached the figure of $1,769,142,175, an increase in assets in twelve months of $170,514,039.

"The unsettled financial conditions created by the world war," to quote from the Secretary's annual report, "have not materially interfered with the growth and prosperity of the building and loan associations. While the business of these associations was, for a time, somewhat disarranged, they nevertheless advanced money freely during the early part of the year for home building purposes; promptly paid their withdrawing members; took an active interest in the Liberty Loan bonds, the War Savings Certificate and Thrift Stamp campaigns, and invested liberally in all these issues. The first Liberty Loan call caused a considerable withdrawal from these associations, and this halted loaning for building operations. The members gradually adjusted themselves to the new conditions, however, and exercised greater economy, with the result that they not only made their regular payments, but actually laid aside a little more during the year than was their custom in ordinary times."

Charles O'Conor Hennessy, former head of the league, observed that although the building and loan associations had thrown open their doors for Liberty Loan subscriptions, and had promoted the sale of Government securities, their own revenues had not suffered, but had even increased as the saving habit became more fixed.

The reaction which the wage earners and the salaried class have given to the new element of saving is indicative of the national trend. In the first flush of prosperity, when men were earning $5 a day for trundling a wheelbarrow and ship riveters were getting from $30 to $40 for eight hours' work, there was a riot of indiscriminate spending. Then a large proportion of the toilers began to realize that an end must come to even the most bounteous harvest, and they began to sow the seeds of thrift. One of the aids in this direction has been the War Savings Society. Units of were established in large factories or big offices. In some city blocks sixteen or seventeen of these societies have taken root and flourished. Some of them have become social clubs as well as means of conserving nickels and dimes. Many of the collectors of these organizations are alert young women who gather up the subscriptions at the end of every week. Thousands of the societies have spread their influence through the country. Said a clerk in a Wall Street banking house, the other morning, as the fair collector was gathering his weekly instalment:

"If it hadn't been for this war saving, I wouldn't have that thousand dollars in the bank which I have hung on to in the last year."

In the schools of the United States the children have taken eagerly to the lessons of thrift. Many of them have ceased to buy sweets and candies and have invested their lunch money in real food. They are showing a care about their clothes which would be a surprise to the boys of a generation ago. In the schools of New York many have volunteered to conserve such supplies as paper, chalk, erasers, pencils, and books. The subscriptions gathered through Thrift Stamps in the schools have stimulated savings in the homes. Even in the absence of a special drive for Thrift Stamps, subscriptions for them were coming into the repositories of the metropolitan district at the rate of $60,000 to $80,000 a day.

So widespread has become the popular habit of saving that numerous organizations of country-wide scope are being formed to encourage and stimulate it. This is shown in resolutions recently adopted at a meeting of the National Thrift Club of New York City and indorsed by influential bankers, which were in part as follows:

"Whereas, It is vital that the process of saving begun during the war be continued before its momentum shall be lost, and the present opportunity for this is an emergency which requires prompt and vigorous action.

"Resolved, That it is in the common interest that employers should use such methods of distributing Liberty bonds, especially of the Fifth Liberty Loan, as can be continued permanently thereafter, and put the habit of saving among their employes on an established basis."

One of the important lessons of thrift learned from the loan years of war has been derived in the credit section. There will be fewer "charge accounts." As one of the exponents of the cult of Franklin remarked the other day, even merchants who sell the costliest wares are not losing anything by the development of the new trait, because people who save make sure always that they are likely to have the price before pledging their future for furniture, furs, and finery. And let none think that because this is likely to become a more and more thrifty nation there will be no more cakes, albeit the supply of ale may fall.

A representative of a conservative banking organization has remarked that even what appears to be lavish spending of money by those who visit that great American playground, New York, is really only a way of getting new ideas and fresh impressions which will more than justify the outlay. So, without stinting and without parsimony, the now thrifty people of the United States may be said to have entered upon a new era of well-considered pleasures along with well-considered expenditures for necessities.

The seeds of saving are sown. In the days to come thrift is bound to yield its good fruit.

ALABAMA IN DISTRESS.

Her Homekeepers Find It Difficult to Get Servants.

Homekeepers are scrubbing, washing dishes, and cooking victuals here in Alabama, in many cases without regard to their ability to pay servants. Now that the war is over the one great topic of conversation at the dinner table, when there are guests, is the servant problem. The domestic service situation never before was like this in the South. In more cases than may be supposed neither love nor money is effective as a temptation to the domestic servant class. Their menfolk for two or three years have been able to make "good money." This supplies the wants of the family—wants that are not pretentious or generally extravagant. Beyond a certain amount of money in the family no more is desired to the extent that all members of the family are ever eager to take the positions offered them and swell the family income to a point which would leave a margin for the savings bank, to be laid up against the well-known rainy day.

The following incident occurred near an Alabama town recently. It illustrates a curious point of view held by a considerable class of negroes, though fortunately not by all negroes.

A negro man was driving a wagon to town containing a small load of wood. Just before the holidays. The negro worked on the place of the white man whose friend, surprised at the small quantity of wood, asked:

"Why doesn't he take a full wagonload of wood to town and get $5 or $6 for it?"

The other man said:

"The wood he has on the wagon will sell for $1. That's all the money he wants at this time."

Flush times in Alabama mean hard times for housekeepers who depend upon hired servants. That is one thing the war has again shown us.—Montgomery Advertiser.

WHAT STABILIZED OCEAN RATES MEAN

Chairman Hurley's Agreement with the Allies on Merchant Marine Labor as It Affects the Individual Pocketbook

By ARTHUR POUND.

CHAIRMAN HURLEY of the Shipping Board went to Europe, as press reports indicate, to arrange three things—the return of American troops, the transporting of food to Europe, and the acceptance by the Allies of American labor standards aboard ship.

As the Allies are now the chief maritime nations and can exert heavy influence upon neutrals possessing ships, this last proposition amounts to an attempt to standardize on the plane of greatest expense the field of world transport. When you consider that the success of the project would affect the living cost of every civilized people and the development of all uncivilized ones, the lack of criticism attending Mr. Hurley's third effort must be accepted as evidence of our being dazzled by the kaleidoscope of events. In such brisk times one fallacy more or less seems to make little difference.

For certain excellent reasons governments control ships flying their flags. Registering of ships and sailors no doubt arose from the need to suppress piracy. An honest ship carried papers issued by the sovereign to prove to all interrogators, alike in foreign ports and on warships doing police duty, that skipper and crew were good men and true, on lawful errand bent. As commerce developed into supplying the necessities of life and industry it became apparent to statesmen that each vessel constituted a valuable asset in time of war. Hence the position, now uniformly taken and accepted, that a State may deny change of registry to a vessel if it deems proper. Practically such power is rarely exercised except in time of war. Similarly, a belligerent State is not to be criticised for refusing to recognize transfer of enemy vessels. There is no limit to the use which States may make of their merchant vessels in time of war. It may commandeer and operate ships, direct the movements of ships privately operated and establish rates for such voyages. In short, upon deep water in time of war the State realizes the full measure of sovereignty.

Power entails responsibility. In war the State accepts the full risks of sovereignty, temporarily abrogating the operations of economic law wherever necessary to secure military results. It has ample funds, and considerations above economy rule during the emergency. In peace, on the other hand, States cannot afford the chances of maritime commerce because the sea is an exceptionally risky medium in which to operate and because such operations involve contacts not always conducive to friendly relations with other States. In practice, therefore, the return of peace finds States laying aside full control of the merchant marine and turning instead to the assistance of commerce, continuing those features related to keeping the seas clear for lawful trade, identifying mariners, ships, and cargoes, and establishing the conditions under which men shall work aboard ship.

Absolute co-operation being essential to safety on the high seas, the Captain's word rules his vessel; but every civilized State in its marine code sets law above personal whim, holds over the autocrat of the quarterdeck the right to call him to account for his stewardship, and grants Jack his day in court if the code is violated. Here, then, is the crux of marine legislation. How far can a State desirous of bettering conditions of labor afloat safely go in that direction? Elevating standards, as we know full well, involves increasing costs. The State which insists upon costly standards of operating ships gives an advantage to ships operated under lower standards. Either it must see its merchant marine dwindle in competition; or, flying in the face of experience, seek a solution such as Mr. Hurley is seeking, effect an international agreement on the basis of high standards and high costs.

MARINE SITUATION.

Let us examine our situation from the angle of each alternative. We have expanded tremendously our merchant marine. A very large proportion of the tonnage has been built at peak prices—both for labor and material. The new, Government-built ships are rightly called the Emergency Fleet; the name should stand; later, if it should prove necessary to dispose of those ships at a loss, the name will go far to explain the loss. Stern challenge by the U-boat required a gamble in ships; none but the Government was rich enough to undertake the gamble.

Rates and prices have both started to slip. The Shipping Board would be glad to take $200 a ton for its wooden ships, $40 a ton under pre-armistice prices, and permit alienation to foreign registry in the bargain. It may have difficulty in disposing of them even on those terms. Steel vessels perforce must follow the scale-down. Vast shipbuilding projects on the way, gradual release of vessels used for transport and military supply, progressive smoothing out of war's destructions, leveling of accumulations of goods here and building up of normal stocks there, all these back the belief that the peak has been reached and the trend henceforth is downward. Ships and ship space will continue to rule high, no doubt, during reconstruction, and probably will never reach old levels. Vessels now in the water, even though the initial cost was high, should reap heavy earnings for some time to come; but those coming along a year or two hence are reasonably certain to be operated upon relatively close margins.

Except for the embarrassment of our Government, this situation would be looked upon with equanimity outside of shipping circles, and perhaps even there also, because the exotic conditions of the past were not without grave financial dangers. On the social and political side, there is every reason to applaud the prospect of decreasing ocean rates, for the excellent reason that the consumer pays the freight; by no sleight of hand can the family budget escape the impact of ocean rates. The housewife pays them at her grocery when she buys tea, coffee, or sugar, the laborer when he buys tobacco or clothes; the business woman when she pays her lunch ticket; the schoolboy when he buys pencils and books. Even if the thing purchased is homegrown or homemade, its cost and price are affected by ocean rates through indirect or potential competition with goods of foreign origin. Consequently lower ocean rates mean a decrease in the cost of living, which is of the utmost social and political importance at the present time all over the world.

Economic overstrain involved in keeping body and soul together—the one decently attired and nourished, the other hopeful and trusting—is a harrowing, disintegrating force which prepares the ground for all manner of rank idea growths. Actually, therefore, the Hurley proposition to standardize ocean traffic on the plane of highest costs and highest standards, resolves itself into a proposal to keep the worldwide cost of living above the level it would otherwise seek in order, (1) that the American Government may not lose on its marine investment, and (2) in order that a certain deserving class of laborers may not be forced to choose between seeking other jobs or having their standards of work lowered.

It is not an easy choice. On the one hand the public must pay, not precisely what the Government stands to lose, (a minor consideration because that will have to be made good by the public anyway in the long run,) but in addition a differential on everything consumable brought to these shores in any bottom under any flag, to say nothing of higher prices for domestic products relieved of just so much pressure from outside competition. On the other hand, we must face the unpleasant prospect of seeing our American merchant marine dwindle both as to ships and personnel, soon after experiencing grave need for American vessels during the war, and paying the heavy cost of building ships and training men in an emergency. There is a widespread feeling also that in the impending trade rivalry American ships are necessary to the prompt placing of American goods in foreign markets. All these considerations must receive due weight.

If America's situation could be considered apart from the rest of the world, Mr. Hurley might be said to have a case. While we have a right, if we choose, to set the possession of an adequate merchant marine and the continuance of relatively high standards of work for the American seamen above the advantages of lower living costs for our entire population, we have no right to sacrifice the well-being of any other people to our decision. It is unlikely that the other chief maritime nations will find their interests running parallel with ours in this respect; but if they should, such unanimity would signify nothing more than that they see a good thing and propose to make the most of it.

Any stabilizing of ocean rates by international agreement above the point which would be reached through supply and demand constitutes an unwarranted restriction upon the well-being of non-maritime nations. These have more need than ourselves to buy goods and services as cheaply as possible, in a market as free as may be from restrictions upon economic law. In the first place, most of them are not in position, political or financial, to set up counterbalancing regulations; in the second, because they are in process of growth toward democratic civilization, trade means much more to them than to citizens of better-developed States. Trade brings them not only goods through the use of which life may reach higher levels of material strength and comfort, but also contacts through which ideas and ideals permeate. Trade is one of the great civilizing factors, certainly the cheapest, and perhaps the most effective of all, since it works steadily through mutual advantage. And precisely as lowering the cost of transport works for civilization, so keeping the cost of ocean transport above the lowest level at which labor and capital will busy themselves efficiently therein is certain to retard civilization.

I pass by the argument that the American public or the British public or the French public is not sufficiently interested in shortening the hours of Lascar labor aboard ship and uplifting Japanese stokers to warrant their Governments taxing allied peoples for the wherewithal to effect such amelioration. There may be sufficient interest, unlikely as it seems. But those publics, which fought the war through to make the world safe for democracy, surely are opposed to any move which would tend to hinder the goods and ideals, the experiences and inspirations of our democratic and industrial civilization from reaching the far corners of the earth. Although the odds are all against the project working out in practice, after all that is not the primary objection. A very clumsy contrivance can be made to work if enough power is put behind it; and the Allies unquestionably possess power, more power than ever yet was concentrated since the world began. But ethics should rule the hour of victory. Mr. Hurley's proposal to standardize marine traffic on the basis of highest standards and highest costs is one of the things that should not be tried.

It is highly significant that cabled reports of Mr. Hurley's progress toward arranging for the return of our troops and the provisioning of Europe carry no word of the standardizing of labor conditions on the high seas. Let us hope the omission denotes a change of heart and opinion, induced by contact with the masters of British shipping who have learned in the hard school of action that attempting to restrict the freedom of seas in peace is a thankless task in which humanity pays dear for miserably meagre results.

Mother Didn't Know Him.

Three years' absence and an army uniform can make a considerable change in a young man, in the opinion of the Fulton Gazette, and the reason for thinking it is that Mrs. J. W. Robertson of Fulton recently failed to recognize her own son, Lieutenant John W. Robertson, when he came home after an absence of that length of time. When he was mustered out he decided to surprise the folks at home and did not wire he was coming. At a town near Mexico he saw his mother in the crowd about to enter the train and assisted her on, and was thanked by her without the slightest sign of recognition. It was some minutes later before she finally knew him.—Kansas City Times.

The Story of a Fire.

Just as soon as a reporter begins in the department of journalism at the University of Kansas, says The Kansan, he is instructed to begin every story with the most important fact. A cub was recently given the assignment to cover a fire at the Sigma Nu House. When the story was turned in it began: "Because one of the Sigma Nus went to his room to study, the fire was discovered."—Kansas City Star.

PURITANISM AS SEQUEL TO BAN ON ALCOHOL

Lawyer's Prediction That There Will Be a Reaction if Enthusiasts Are Permitted to Enact Extreme Restrictive Measure

H. GERALD CHAPIN, lawyer and writer on legal questions, regards the passage of the prohibition amendment as only the first of a series of restrictions of personal liberty in the United States. This, he adds, is a deplorable situation, a state of affairs which must be fought. But his suggestion for a plan of campaign does not urge a struggle against the enforcement of the amendment by any means, or the gathering of any forces in battle array against legislation, however radical, that may infringe the personal freedom of the American citizen. Mr. Chapin calls his fellows to a line of procedure quite the opposite.

"Let us deal with the situation," he suggests, "on the analogy of the runaway horse. Give him a free head. Let him run himself up hill and down dale until he is worn out and stops from exhaustion. Let him run his legs off!

"In plainer terms, let us fight for our personal liberty by giving a free hand to the forces that are working for its restriction. In the very nature of things, these forces will be carried to extremes where a reaction will set in, and the danger of permanent infringement upon personal liberty in this country will have died away."

Mr. Chapin's opposition to the Federal prohibition law is based, he explains, solely on this ground of personal liberty. But, as an authority on legal problems, he sees no possibility of making a successful fight against the constitutionality of the amendment, nor does he expect it ever to be repealed. His present concern is not with combating prohibition, but with meeting the situation which, in the country's present mood, he believes must be the prohibition amendment's result. If that situation is met, as he suggests, however, Mr. Chapin believes that the prohibition law, as a Federal statute, will become a dead letter, and that the question of prohibition will become, through the enforcement or non-enforcement of the national law, once more a State or local issue.

"I want to say in the first place," he remarked the other day, "that I am by no means speaking as an advocate of the liquor interests. I am not interested in this as a question of liquor or no-liquor. From my point of view that is immaterial. The thing that makes it so hard to enter any protest at present against any feature of the prohibition movement, however high-handed, is that one is at once accused of speaking for the liquor interests, and called all sorts of names generally. Now I have nothing to do with that side of it. I am gravely concerned with what I believe will be the inevitable results of the passage of the Federal prohibition amendment at this particular time. I think we must look for a long series of high-handed infringements upon personal liberty in this country, in the form of State legislation which is expressly permitted in the terms of the prohibition amendment, and which the anti-saloon people are openly planning at the present time.

"In the present mood of the country it would be a mistake to combat this movement—or these infringements upon our liberty—by trying to prevent the passage of such laws, or attempting to evade their enforcement. I am convinced that we must go at it the other way about, and depend upon the sane psychology of reaction.

"For we must keep in mind the fact that the country is in an abnormal state of mind. For a year and a half we were under the strain and tension of war, and the war ended in the twinkling of an eye, to the total surprise of the country at large. Most people's minds move slowly, and we are still to a great extent keyed up to the war's tension. Having got in the mood for willing sacrifice, the people are still in that mood. During the war we had to make sacrifices, and we made them gladly. Laws were passed that restricted personal liberty, and under wartime conditions and the necessity of subordinating everything else to the winning of the war, these restrictions were perfectly proper. But I hope I shall not be misunderstood when I say that while the espionage law, for example, was entirely proper as a war emergency, it would be a grave misfortune to perpetuate such restrictive measures in our national life. However that may be, the fact remains that the country is now in a peculiar mood of willingness to accept restrictions upon the liberty of the individual.

"The prohibition amendment prohibits the 'manufacture, sale, or transportation' of intoxicating liquors, and adds that 'Congress and the several States shall have concurrent power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.' The restrictive measures that I expect will not be Federal but State laws, and I am convinced that we are in for a series of high-handed acts beginning with the matter of 'appropriate legislation' to enforce the Federal law. Our danger, as I see it, is not in regard to the liquor question per se, but consists in the fact that the present liquor amendment sets a precedent which marks it as only the beginning. I am convinced, of a series of infringements on personal liberty.

"For example, it is already openly proposed to pass a series of acts that will prohibit an individual's keeping or having in his possession alcoholic liquors, and as a corollary to such an act a State could readily establish the right of search. That is to say, a man's house might be entered by an officer with a search warrant, and searched throughout for intoxicating liquors!

"We are also told that acts are about to be passed prohibiting the manufacture and sale of colognes, hair tonics, and similar toilet articles that contain a certain percentage of alcohol. That leads naturally to further prohibitions governing, for example, the manufacture of shellac containing a certain percentage of a certain kind of alcohol, and even the use of alcohol in the arts.

"One enthusiastic advocate already speaks of 'the next law' as one that will prohibit the sale of cigarettes. From that it is only a step further to a law prohibiting the use of tobacco in any form. Another enthusiast wants to close all the motion picture theatres on Sunday.

"I only mention these examples as pointing the general argument, which is this: When you once begin, where are you going to stop? The passage of the prohibition amendment contains significant features already, as in California, where the people voted wet at the last election and the State Legislature defied them and made California one of the thirty-six States that first ratified the Federal amendment and thus put through the Federal amendment; and Connecticut, one of the most conservative States in the country, where it is announced that the Legislature is about to vote for prohibition 'because every one else is.' Now, when you get such a state of mind as this of Connecticut, what is going to happen? We must bear in mind not only that the country is still in great part keyed up to the state of sacrifice and willingness to allow infringements on its liberty, but that in any such question as this the majority of people find it much easier to drift with the current. As a result of that tendency a small and vociferous body can generally sway public opinion on any proposition.

"I think that such laws as I have mentioned—the prohibition of tobacco, for example—are in very real danger of passage, not, of course, as Federal laws but as separate State legislation in various communities. I expect attempts to pass such laws in New York State. Personally, I believe that laws of the most stringent character will be passed in many parts of the country. The prohibition interests are in full control at the present time.

"Nor, in my own opinion, will the movement for the restriction of personal liberty be necessarily confined to such infringements upon the individual's life and habits. I think it may very well lead to other restrictions, such as attempts at the continuation of restrictions which have been found proper in wartime, but would be improper except in emergency, for infringements on the rights of free speech and assemblage, perhaps, or similar acts. And as the result of such restrictions, I think there may very well be upheavals and labor disturbances in the sections where such laws are enforced. I believe, however, that the good sense of the country will not permit of going too far in that direction, just as I believe that the good sense of the American laboring men is too great to make Bolshevism a real menace to our country. What I expect is sporadic disturbance and local restrictive laws.

"Now the question for us to face is how to deal with the situation. Prohibition is here. I believe the Federal amendment to be entirely constitutional, and I do not think that it is ever likely to be repealed. But the whole movement of infringement on personal liberty, growing out of the passage of the Federal prohibition amendment, is something that we must face squarely and combat in the best possible way. My suggestion for combating it is based on simple, logical human psychology. The best figure, I think, is that of the runaway horse."

Mr. Chapin explained his parallel, and continued: "We cannot at the present time control this movement for the restriction of personal liberty. We must deal with the situation, but we cannot hope to deal with it that way. We must take the opposite tack—if people want restriction, let us give it to them! My own idea is that all these restrictive laws should be favored. Let us out-Herod Herod—and then the pendulum will swing back to liberty again.

"The weakness in the position of those who assail personal liberty," Mr. Chapin went on, "is that such movements, whether in prohibition or in any other guise, must inevitably be subject in the end to the control of the extreme members of the party. The leaders of these various movements may—and no doubt often do—realize that the thing can be pushed too far; but when they unloose any attack upon popular liberty they unloose forces that they themselves cannot control. Moderate policies are sure to be swept aside.

"Consequently—and taking into consideration the fact of which I have already spoken, that the country is still under the spell of self-sacrifice—there is, I think, no doubt that we have got to pass through a period of restrictive legislation, and the only question for us is how we can get through it the quickest. I have already outlined my plan.

"It is impossible to predict the time it will take, in any part of the country, to get through this period of restriction, but the desirable thing is to get the most stringent laws that the most high-handed extremists want, and to have fanatics enforce them. The anti-saloon people will naturally want their officers made active in enforcing the restrictive laws. Fine! Let us have these laws enforced in the most rigid possible way. Let us have a return to absolute Puritanism. And even if other infringements upon liberty go along with that, such as the continuation of present restrictions now recognized as war emergencies, after the necessity for them has ceased to exist, even in such cases let us go ahead and give the advocates of restriction a free hand. What we should do is to join in with the advocates of 'laws with teeth'—as the enthusiasts call the legislation that they mean to have passed to follow up the prohibition amendment; and see that their strongest laws are passed and enforced. Then we shall have the reaction, and these restrictive laws will be repealed."

"But don't you think there is danger that the reaction may go too far?" Mr. Chapin was asked, and he replied with emphasis:

"No, I don't. The pendulum that is pulled far in one direction never swings quite so far back in the other. I think that in this case we need not be afraid that the reaction will lead to license. We will get personal liberty as a reaction to restriction—and that is the only way we will get it things are now.

"As for the effect that the reaction will, in my opinion, have on the prohibition law," Mr. Chapin said, in answer to a question, "I think it will become, as a general law, a dead letter. That is, the communities that want prohibition will enforce the law, and those that do not want it will, by general consent, disregard it. As an example, I may point out that at the present time there is a grave question whether it is not illegal in this State to open the motion-picture theatres on Sunday. In one decision up the State it was held to be illegal. But by common consent the question is not pressed, and that decision is not enforced in New York City.

"That is what I think will happen to prohibition in the sections or communities where the people do not want it. It will stand on the statute books, but its enforcement will be a local matter. And thus each community will be allowed, as it should be, to settle the prohibition question for itself."

BLIND HERO HELPED TO NEW LIFE

BACK of a gift of $5,000 just made to the Permanent Blind Relief War Fund, 590 Fifth Avenue, New York, by a well-known American, W. H. Singer, Jr., of Paris and Pittsburgh, is an unusually interesting story of a French soldier's gallantry in action, and of his pluck and indomitable energy under the handicaps of blindness and mutilation.

Marcel Gesta, before the war, was manager of a shipping concern in Algiers, with a financial interest in one of its vessels. He had a wife and two small boys. In February, 1915, Gesta was pointer of one of two first-line guns which were holding their ground in the village of Sulzern, Alsace, under terrific German fire. For forty-eight hours they stood it, while the men serving the guns—nineteen in all—were dropping about the weapons. Finally the adjutant in command signaled the artillery commander.

"I know your predicament," came the answer, "but you must hold out where you are at all costs."

They did. When at last the enemy's fire silenced the two guns all the men save Gesta were dead, and he was unconscious. A shell had fallen on the ammunition dump and the resulting explosion had killed his surviving comrades and burned him from head to foot, destroying his eyes and fingers.

Some time afterward, when his wife learned what had happened, she hurried to him in the hospital and insisted on nursing him herself. His body was one gangrened wound, so horrible that he had to be kept apart from the other injured men. But Mme. Gesta did not give way to lamentation. She set to work with the surgeons, encouraging them as well as the patient, and after a long struggle she won her fight for him with death. Her victory was aided by her husband's fortitude and will power. He bore his awful sufferings without a groan or one word of complaint.

When he had recovered sufficiently to return home his disfigurement was such that his terrified children ran from him, shrieking: "No, no! This is not our papa!"

Despite his terrible handicap, Gesta was far from considering himself down and out. With characteristic pluck he and his wife took stock of their situation and found that to begin life anew with they had $3,000 in cash acquired by the sale of his interest in the shipping concern, plus the pension of $240 a year allowed him by the French Government. They decided to go in for farming and made application for a grant of land. A stretch of sixty acres situated about 400 miles from the City of Algiers was allotted by the Colonial Service. Investigation satisfied them, however, that the land was not suitable for their purposes.

Meanwhile, their case had been called to the attention of the Permanent Blind Relief War Fund. Gesta was asked how best he could be helped.

He suggested that he should be aided in procuring land that would not eat up his little capital in getting it cleared and irrigated and submitted an itemized statement to show that he needed another $5,000 for working capital, sheds, livestock, &c., in order to start with any prospect of success.

M. Brieux, President of the Fund's French section, exerted his influence to obtain for Gesta a grant of 200 acres of suitable land beside the railroad and in the vicinity of Algiers itself, and succeeded, and Mr. Singer, who is a good friend of the fund's blind protégés, was told about the remarkable intelligence, energy, and grit of the mutilated blind man and his devoted helpmate.

In a few days a letter was received from Mr. Singer enclosing a check for $5,000 on behalf of himself and Mrs. Singer.

"I will do anything to assist Gesta and his wonderful wife," he wrote.

SHORTHAND RECORD 5 WORDS A SECOND

A NEW record for speed in shorthand writing was made on Jan. 18 by Herman J. Stich of 961 St. Nicholas Avenue, New York City, a court reporter in the Brooklyn Children's Court and teacher in the College of the City of New York, at an official competition of the Isaac Pitman Shorthand Writers' Association.

Mr. Stich took testimony from a court record dictated at the rate of 300 words a minute for five minutes and transcribed it, with only two errors for each 200 words. Other stenographers entered the competition at the rate of 300 words a minute, but none of them attempted to transcribe their notes.

The high speed achieved in previous championships had been 280 words a minute. Most of the free-for-all speed contests since 1911 have been won by Nathan Behrin, who was not a contestant at the trial where Mr. Stich made his record.

The speed of 300 words a minute is only possible on matter taken from the court records where most of the words are monosyllables and where many of the questions and answers are stereotyped and where whole clusters of words are represented by brief symbols. Mr. Stich's record for writing "straight matter" is 200 words a minute, with five errors. This was made in an official competition where editorials from THE NEW YORK TIMES were read. One hundred and eighty words a minute has been previously considered the highest practicable speed at which difficult matter could be written in shorthand.

Mr. Stich is 25 years old, and started to learn shorthand five years ago to earn extra money while he was making his way through the College of the City of New York. In a year he could write shorthand at the rate of 120, and won a contest at that speed for writers under 21 years of age. He had made a practice of using editorials from THE NEW YORK TIMES for speed training, and now uses them regularly in his classes because of the variety of subjects and the range of vocabulary.

Mr. Stich's main device for speed training, in addition to taking dictation and speeches, had been that of writing out matter in shorthand in a notebook, leaving a space of five blank lines between the written lines. Then, beginning at the beginning, he reads the notes aloud and writes them again in shorthand on the line immediately underneath. This is repeated until the blank lines are filled. By the use of this device, the student gets practice in reading his notes at the same time that he is dictating to himself and errors or bad style in writing come to his attention and call for correction.

ABRAHAM AND STRAUS BROOKLYN

Store Opens 9 A. M. Closes 6 P. M.

The Great Half-Yearly Sale of Furniture

Presents Much Specially Gathered Furniture of High Degree Together With Important Reductions from Our Own Rich Stocks

QUALITY, combined with moderate prices, has built up in the A. & S. Furniture Store one of the largest businesses of its kind in New York.

These advantages are more than ever evident in the splendid offerings that form this Half-yearly Furniture Sale—an event to which hundreds of Brooklyn homes look forward.

Careful planning is necessary nowadays to make a Furniture Sale that shall be worth while. We have worked, months ahead, with some of the best makers in America, to secure choice groups of Furniture that will not be found duplicated at their prices elsewhere; some of which are illustrated on this page.

Then we have selected many fine Suites and individual pieces from our own stocks, to bear sale prices that are much reduced.

It is a collection that ranks with our best, in point of desirability and variety of styles, and the fine savings involved. Much additional news of great interest will be announced during the coming month.

For cleansing, one cream—For protection, an entirely different cream

To give your skin the loveliness it should have, two entirely different creams are needed—an oil cream for cleansing, and a non oily cream for protection

THE skin is constantly being toughened and coarsened by its daily exposure to wind and dirt. Unless you take care to cleanse it thoroughly of all impurities at night and to protect it properly during the day, you deliberately sacrifice the clear, fresh-looking complexion you could so easily have.

Cleanse the skin each night

Particularly at the end of a windy, dusty day pores of your skin are filled with fine particles of grime and dirt. To make the skin clear and fine-textured, it must be kept thoroughly cleansed.

Before going to bed cleanse the skin liberally with Pond's Cold Cream. The soothing, refreshed feeling will be noticeable at once.

You will find Pond's Cold Cream a perfect oil cream for massage as well as for cleansing.

Protect your skin all winter

Every woman who cares about her appearance knows that in cold winter days the skin must be especially protected to prevent its becoming rough, red and chapped. You can protect your skin from wind and cold, can keep it soft and smooth by applying a little Pond's Vanishing Cream just before you go out.

Rub it lightly into your skin. At once it disappears without leaving a trace of disagreeable shine. By taking this simple precaution, you can keep your skin lovely all winter.

The very first application will show you how much your skin is benefited.

Pond's Vanishing Cream is wholly different from any other cream you have ever used. It contains no oil and cannot make the skin shiny.

The nightly cleansing and massage with Pond's Cold Cream keep the skin clear and smooth

AT a moment's notice, whenever you want your skin to look its best, Pond's Vanishing Cream brings it new freshness. As a protection, too, you should apply a little just before going out into the cold. It prevents roughening and keeps the skin fair and soft.

Famous women who use it

Billie Burke, Frances Starr, Martha Hedman, Elsie Janis, Norma Talmadge, Marion Davies, Mabel Taliaferro, Marjorie Rambeau, and others of the most famous women of the stage, use Pond's Vanishing Cream constantly.

All of the ingredients of Pond's Cold Cream and Pond's Vanishing Cream have been carefully selected and tested. Only the purest and freshest are used. Neither cream will grow hair or down on the skin. Try them both for a week and notice how much lovelier your skin looks.

Free sample tubes

Tear out and mail the coupon today and we will send you sample tubes of each cream free. Or for 10c to cover postage, packing, etc., we will send you larger tubes of both creams, containing enough to last two weeks. Send for them today.

The Breakfast for Every Kind of Morning

The breakfast everyone likes best! That's easiest for you! And the most economical!

For the ordinary morning

So good for children!

Give them Aunt Jemima Pancakes. They'll love them—they'll scramble down early—they'll eat "good breakfasts"!

And the hot, tender cakes are so healthful, so nourishing—you couldn't give them anything better.

For the "slept-late" morning

So QUICK—so EASY—to make

No mixing to do—no measuring—everything is ready mixed in the flour—even the sweet milk. You just add water, give the batter a brisk beating, and less than a minute later you are lifting the tender, golden cakes off the griddle.

For the morning you have guests

Perfect cakes EVERY time

Your guests will exclaim over them—they have so much more delicious flavor than ordinary pancakes. The sweet milk—powdered and mixed in—the specially ground flours—give Aunt Jemima Pancakes a flavor you cannot get in any others.

And they are so economical, too! Three Aunt Jemima breakfasts cost less than one of meat or eggs! Order a package of Aunt Jemima Pancake Flour today.

Make muffins and waffles and breadsticks of Aunt Jemima Pancake Flour, too. See how light and fine flavored they are. Aunt Jemima Buckwheat Flour comes in the yellow package. Aunt Jemima Mills Company, St. Joseph, Missouri.

Solves Milk Troubles

KRYSTALAK is more convenient for cooking than bottled milk. Just mix these dry, flaky, pure milk crystals with water, whenever milk is needed in cooking. Krystalak keeps sweet and clean for months. Keep it on your pantry shelf and you will always have fresh milk whenever you need it.

KRYSTALAK will enable you to increase the food value of your meals by cooking more milk dishes. It reduces your milk bill by several cents on each quart, and makes it possible to increase the amount of nourishment in your meals.

KRYSTALAK is pure, separated milk with all of the water taken out. It comes to you in sanitary cartons direct from healthy cows. A 50c. pound package makes 5 quarts of cooking milk.

Endorsed by leading domestic science authorities. Krystalak Cook Book free. Full of deliciously appetizing suggestions for milk cooking. Write to us or secure a copy from your dealer.

OLD-FASHIONED RICE PUDDING

1 cup KRYSTALAK dissolved in 4 cups water
⅓ cup rice
½ teaspoon salt
⅓ cup sugar
¾ cup raisins

Wash rice and raisins, mix all ingredients, and pour into buttered pudding dish. Bake 3 hours in a very slow oven, stirring three times during first hour of baking to prevent rice from settling.

Krystalak for sale at all good stores. If your grocer does not have Krystalak in stock, he can easily secure it for you through his jobber.

Laine De Guerre · Wool Jersey · Tricolette

FROM Paris has come enthusiastic approval of these fashionable fabrics. And from America's better shops is raised that great demand which always follows Parisian approbation of styles.

As the largest exclusive manufacturers in the world of models featuring these materials, it is but natural that we should be looked to, to supply that demand.

Our showing is unique, not only as display of every Parisian mode and color combination, but as a wonderful illustration of the heights of our specialization.

Buyers who look for bigger business in 1919, cannot afford to miss this display.

La-May Face Powder Is Pure!

—No White Lead—No Rice Powder—
It Really Stays On Unusually Well.

Up to the present time it has been almost impossible to get a face powder to stay on longer than it takes to put it on. You powder your nose nicely and the first gust of wind or the first puff of your handkerchief and away goes the powder, leaving your nose red, shiny and conspicuous, probably just at the very moment when you would give anything to appear at your best. A specialist has at last perfected a pure powder that women say stays on wonderfully well. It does not contain white lead or starchy rice powder (Poudre de Riz) to make it stay on. White lead poisons the skin and rice powder turns into a gluey paste that encourages enlarged pores and unsightly complexions. This improved formula contains a medicinal powder doctors use to heal the skin. In fact, this new powder helps to prevent and reduce enlarged pores and irritations. It is called La-may (French, Poudre L'Amé). Because it is pure and because it stays on so well, it is already sold everywhere. The large size is only fifty cents and the trial size is twenty-five cents. When you use this delightful La-may and see how wonderfully it beautifies your complexion, you will understand why it is now used by over a million American women.

Domestic Insolvency

An Anonymous Story of a Young Couple Who Rose From Insolvency to Independence

BY JUNE'S HUSBAND

JUNE and I were married about six months before the Kaiser began making vicious passes at civilization. It was about the middle of August before I knew there was a war in the world, and when I told June about it she said she had heard rumors but that she hadn't mentioned them for fear they might upset me. That's how happy we were.

Every Saturday night I'd take the old pay envelope home and toss it on the dining-room table. It made a noise like the fall of the Bastile to us two babes in the matrimonial woods, but before Monday morning there wasn't enough left to allow for a three-cent raise in the price of sugar.

So by easy stages we drifted into domestic insolvency. At the end of the first year about all we had in the world was a five-room apartment, a landlord, a hatful of unpaid bills and two immortal souls—and another immortal soul on the way.

When June told me the glad news about that impending event, I was so happy I wanted to go out and pull a traffic policeman off his horse. The policeman was saved from peril, however, by June's subsequent remarks.

"We haven't anything laid by," she said; "not only that, but we are terribly in debt. I've just a dollar in change and the agent was here this morning for the rent."

I cracked the old wheeze about our having our health, but it didn't get across. It just laid there, and I swallowed a lump as big as a golf ball.

Well, the long and the short of it was that we drew up a beautiful set of resolutions. We were to clothe ourselves in sackcloth and eat ashes until "Received Payment" had pushed "Please Remit" off the stoop. We retired satisfied but unhappy.

It wasn't long before we discovered that even the finest burlap sacking leaves much to be desired and chafes the skin—so we gradually resumed our accustomed raiment. As for ashes, they are neither nourishing nor palatable.

But in spite of everything we kept right on loving each other a whole lot that second year, though I will state that romance almost withered in the atmosphere created by the scent of onions cooking on the poor-house stove. Will Carleton caused me a lot of worry when he wrote, "Over the Hills to the Poor House."

In due course we were in receipt of a small, red, male baby. He arrived without baggage and found "Welcome" scribbled all over the place. But after I got all my bills in I was a proud and happy father by day, and a humbled and sleepless debtor by night.

We had great plans for that boy's ultimate future, I can tell you, but we couldn't scratch out a plan for his parents' immediate present. His inheritance was likely to consist of one large hungry wolf that perpetually hung around our front door. I don't mean that we were poor—the kind of poor that societies are formed for the improvement of. I was drawing down fifty-eight a week then. But we were the kind of poor that had to spend our income to conceal the fact that we were on the rocks. It was like robbing Peter of nineteen dollars to buy Paul a two-hundred-dollar fur overcoat.

And let him who has an income of from $3,000 to $5,000 a year and is running his domestic affairs at a handsome profit hurl the first brick.

Well, we might have been coasting yet were it not for the fact that when June pays a quarter for a magazine she reads it from Harrison Fisher to Eastman Kodak.

One evening she handed me a copy of the magazine and pointed out an advertisement of Woolson's Economy Book.

I read it all the way through, and the party it told about was sure me. I disremember the gentleman's name, but it seems that his family was once as far gone as ours was. He and his wife gave the Economy Book a whirl—found that it was easy and simple to operate, and in a couple of months they had not only greased the palms of their creditors with considerable silver, but they had money in the bank. The book cost two dollars, exactly the same amount I had spent for lunch that day.

And for the first time little Henry looked like a future President of the United States.

"Well," I said to June, "this looks like salvation. Two dollars is a reasonable price for dragging a human family out of a deep social hole. Let's send for it."

And we did.

The night the book arrived, June and I started right in to foreclose on Old Man Deficit. We figured until one o'clock in the morning with the aid of the Economy Book and a short lead pencil. We laid out a plan of campaign that would make General Foch look like a Rookie. We knew, for the first time in our matrimonial career, how much we owed, how much we could live on well and comfortably, and, at the same time, clean the slate. We doped it out that before another six weeks had passed down the long, dark corridor of history, we would be unshackled and have at least two hundred dollars in the vaults of some good, reliable bank.

Before we turned in, we stood over the baby's crib, and for the first time little Henry looked like a future President of the United States.

And believe me it worked—all but the President of the U. S. stuff, which is still a long time off.

That was two years ago, and at this minute I can write my check for a thousand dollars—only I won't.

The Economy Book is still in operation.

We call it the fourth member of our family. When it comes time to pay my income tax next year I won't have to keep Uncle Samuel waiting for his money and I won't have to borrow it either—thanks to the Economy Book. And if business takes me from home, I can leave June and the youngster with the assurance that she knows how to make every dollar deliver one hundred cents' worth of efficiency. And June looks more charming when she's biting the end off a soft lead pencil, working over the Economy Book, than she ever looked behind an armful of roses.

My personal observation is that it is no trick whatever to glide gently and swiftly into domestic insolvency—but to regain the heights without assistance requires something more than a couple of good resolutions and a lot of self-denial. It needs the services of an expert—and that is where George B. Woolson comes in.

Today every man and woman should spend his income intelligently. There can be no argument about this fact. This nation, to win the war, had to conserve. You cannot practice economy by simply being willing to do so. Woolson's Economy Expense Book will absolutely, and in the best and simplest way, keep an account of your income and expenses. By it you can compare every type of expense by weeks, months, and years. You can lay out a budget which will guide you surely and certainly to a proper use of your income.

In the front of the book are many ideas on the saving of money. Budgets founded on practical experience are supplied. You can draw up a budget for yourself, after a study of those which other people have used.

Woolson's Economy Expense Book is not an untried idea. The first Woolson's Economy Expense Book was sold over fifteen years ago—it was the first household account book, and none of the many adaptations to it which have since appeared on the market have succeeded in developing a more simple system.

By the use of Woolson's Economy Expense Book you can make your income tax returns, deducting the proper items, such as interest, taxes, charity, etc. You will have a detailed account of all items of income so that these can be properly placed in your returns.

Employers might well present a copy of this book to every employee. Parents should present one to every child, married or single, having an income of his own.

You do not have to buy this book on the description only. Write for a copy. It will be sent absolutely on approval. Examine it for five days. Then send the money, or if the book is not absolutely all that you expected or want, you may return the book.

It costs only $2.00, and it provides room for four years' accounting. (50c per year.) If you send your money first—you may send the book back within five days if it is not absolutely satisfactory and your money will be refunded. On account of the rising cost of paper and labor the price of this book will have to be advanced shortly. Remember this is a handsome, well-made and substantially bound book. It will stand hard and long use. Order at once. George B. Woolson & Co., 116 West 32d St., Dept. F, New York, N. Y.

An American Campfire in North Russia—the First Photograph of Our Men in the Archangel Region

WHERE YANKS STILL FIGHT

Battlefront of Three Sectors Held by Allied Troops Against Bolsheviki Under the Rim of the Arctic Circle

IN all our history, bright with deeds of daring and fortitude, American soldiers have never had to fight under such rigorous conditions as in the Archangel area of Northern Russia. It is war at from 20 to 40 degrees below zero, literally an arctic campaign. The details of it—such as the redoubled rebound of a shell from the rigid frozen earth, multiplying its destructive power—quicken the imagination as they come to us piecemeal. But so slowly is the news dribbling from Archangel that as yet we have only a blurred story of the frozen region where war still rages.

Archangel, on the Gulf of Dvina, is the base. Thence there are three fronts, representing an arc extending from 100 to 200 miles from Archangel. The front to be defended is 400 miles in length. On the eastern sector our chief point is Pinega, on the Pinega River. Kadish, 75 miles east of the Archangel-Vologda Railroad, is the centre of our southern front. Onega, on Onega Bay, is the main point on the western sector. In this area, white with snow from two feet deep and upward, the Allies have about 15,000 men. Against them are arrayed not less than 25,000 Bolsheviki, including, besides, Russian Reds, Austrians, Germans, and Magyars. Some of the companies are officered by men of the old régime compelled to contribute their technical skill on pain of death. This has been learned from captured prisoners.

Our forces number 5,419 men, composed of the 339th Infantry, 310th Engineers, 1st Battalion; 337th Field Hospital and the 337th Ambulance Company, under the command of Colonel George E. Stewart. The United States troops are scattered with the allied troops over the 400 mile front with small detachments at places on the line of communications. These lines extend in ribs from Archangel, to the east, south, west, and over them the supplies go forward on sleds. It is exceptional to have more than one company of Americans serving at one place. Front line troops are rotated to prevent undue hardships.

Many questions have come to Washington as to whether our troops in the Archangel area were provided with suitable food and clothing to stand the arctic Winter. Colonel Stewart was instructed to make a tour of inspection and report to Washington. His report, received by the War Department a few days ago, said:

"General health, discipline, and morale of troops excellent. Billeting and living conditions good except at advanced outposts, where usual field conditions exist and improvised blockhouses are the only shelter."

The huts are built of logs, similar to those of primitive days in this country. Much of the Archangel area is heavily wooded with firs. The food is a special ration for life in the arctic, with an extra supply of fat. Sir Ernest Shackleton, the arctic explorer, who is with the Allies' North Russian forces, is giving the benefit of his experience to the proper feeding of the men. There is only one much-missed shortage, the lack of fresh vegetables. Some dried fruit is the only substitute. As to clothing each soldier has in addition to the regular overseas equipment a fur cap, fur mittens, moose hide moccasins, fur overcoat, fur parkas and fur mucklucks. The parka is a fur coat coming to about the knees and having a hood attached. Mucklucks are Winter boots of the kind used in Alaska and other northern countries.

Battles between the allied forces and the Bolsheviki have been mainly on the Kadish and the Onega fronts, and in the clashes on each of these, before the dead of Winter set in, the Bolsheviki were driven back with loss, after putting up desperate resistance. The points taken by the Allies were not part of a campaign of aggression, but were deemed necessary as strategic centres to protect our troops from sudden onslaughts by the Bolsheviki.

American troops won their greatest distinction in the taking of Kadish, a settlement of comfortable huts and much prized for this reason. Last November our troops held Kadish, but were forced to give way before the Bolsheviki. They were compelled to retreat to the Emsta River, and there in the forest built such blockhouses and lean-tos as could be hastily improvised. Just after Christmas plans were completed to retake Kadish. The start was made at 4 o'clock in the morning, timed to take advantage of the four or five hours of sunless daylight in that arctic country. The soldiers were clothed in heavy fur outfits. Each man wore a white canvas robe with a cowl, so that even at midday in the faint light the soldiers were indistinguishable a few hundred yards away against the snow. The Americans surprised the Bolsheviki and captured the town. The next day the Bolsheviki made a counterattack, using three and six inch guns, and drove our troops out, but they were unable to reoccupy Kadish, for a barrage from the Americans prevented them. On the following day the United States forces retook the place. We have not only held it, but now have two protecting outposts well to the south of it.

New points taken by the Americans

QUICK PEACE---THEN A LEAGUE

Immediate Settlement of Vital War Questions Should Precede Formation of International Union, Says Senator Wadsworth, Just Returned from Europe

SENATOR JAMES W. WADSWORTH of New York, who has just returned from a visit to France and England, made for the purpose of observation and study, brought back with him one conviction above all others—that urgent practical questions now facing the Peace Conference should be taken up and settled before consideration of the formation of a League of Nations.

"I went to Europe with an open mind as to which should have priority," said Mr. Wadsworth in Washington the other day, "but what I saw and heard while there, and events that have happened since my departure, impress upon me that a settlement first of the practical questions is of an importance that can hardly be exaggerated. Away from the atmosphere of Europe we do not realize how pressing these questions are, or what dangers of irritation and friction and worse effects may ensue from postponing the determination of them.

"All Europe, one might say, is groping—in a suspense which is without parallel in history. To mention one question of fundamental importance, we do not know of a time when the boundaries of so many States and proposed States were in a condition of uncertainty. Imagine what that would be in our own country, and then multiply it a dozen times over, and you have a picture of the uncertainty now hanging over Europe."

"What do you consider the leading practical questions to be?" the Senator was asked.

"What indemnities Germany and Austria must pay," he answered, "what the reparation is to be, what is to be done with the German fleet, what is to be done with the German colonies, the determining of boundary lines of new States, as I have already indicated; the form of government to be recognized in the new nations—oppressed peoples which have won their freedom in this war; for example, the Czechoslovaks, the Poles, the Jugoslavs. Think what the strain in these new countries must be, contending with the menace of famine and the undercurrent of Bolshevism as the acting authorities try to maintain control until the day when the Peace Conference shall put the seal of stability on them. Delay here is dangerous, might produce the gravest consequences.

"There is another phase of this question of equal importance. We all know there are some conflicting territorial claims among those who stood on the side of the Allies. During the war all was unity; in the days succeeding the armistice the unity was still paramount; that is, the temper of the peoples concerned was in the most favorable condition for a prompt and harmonious settlement of conflicting claims. But with postponement and the protracted concentration of national thought on special national interests we can see that the likelihood of increasing friction enters in.

"The vital question of the settlement of boundary lines is seen in something like its true extent when one takes into consideration that all the country from the Baltic, where the claims of Poland begin, followed by those of Czechoslovakia, through the Balkans and into Asia Minor, through Syria to Mesopotamia, is concerned. Precedent to the establishment of a League of Nations the status and territorial extent of new nations created by the allied victory ought to be determined. After this is done and the terms of peace are settled, I think it would be time to consider the formation of a League of Nations—to which the neutrals could be invited.

"The neutrals cannot take part in the Peace Conference, and so if the League of Nations comes up first there they will not be present to express their ideas, as they are entitled to express them. The scourge of war was never so thoroughly impressed upon the world as it is now, and if a League of Nations can be formed that will eliminate war, or reduce the likelihood of war, it will be welcomed as the greatest possible boon by the people of all countries. As the burdens of this most terrible of wars fall on them, as they will heavily in taxes for some years to come at least, the desire to prevent future wars will be none the less strong because of a postponement until after the imperative practical questions of the peace terms are disposed of. The League of Nations is a proposal subject to debate; it is already apparent that there are many plans—forty, as reported from Paris—and a long discussion is seen ahead—I might say an almost endless one—if this problem is taken up first. If the practical questions upon which peace must actually rest are deferred for the long period required to thrash out what is the best form of a League of Nations, chaos may appear in half a dozen places in Europe.

"The question touches us in numerous important ways, but in one of the first importance. Our soldiers want to come home. The many letters that are coming from parents to members of Congress are proof of that; but to realize fully what this longing is, it is necessary to spend some time among the men over there as I did. They are willing to stay—feel it their duty to stay—as long as military necessity requires their presence, but they do not wish to be kept there during the League of Nations' debate. They want, therefore, to see the peace terms fixed and peace declared as soon as possible. But if the League of Nations is taken up first there is no telling how long they will have to remain in Europe, or what may be required of them if the settlement of urgent practical questions is unnecessarily postponed. I do not mean to indicate by this that the soldiers themselves are taking any sides as to the League of Nations proposition, but simply to show what effect the deferment of the practical issue will have on them. The English and the French soldiers feel the same way; they want to get out of the army and back to their old jobs, or in new ones, as soon as possible."

GERMAN REVOLUTIONARY SOLDIERS AT STRASBOURG.

Wearing White Bands on Their Sleeves, Some of Them in Civilian Clothes, They Were Guarding One of the City's Bridges Before the Entry of the Allied Troops. Such Scenes of Confusion in Germany Have Been Common Since the Teuton Revolution Began.

"What do you think of the menace of Bolshevism in Europe?"

"I think the danger is mainly confined to the defeated countries," was the answer. "It is certainly a menace in Germany. One of the difficulties with which the Peace Conference will have to contend is the uncertainty of political conditions in Germany. These may result in the Allies being unable to find a Government with which they can deal and depend upon to carry out agreements made. No one seems to know what is going on in Germany; that is, to what extent the new Government reflects a real change in the people. In a military sense Germany is prostrate and will undoubtedly remain so for years to come. As to Russia, I found it most difficult of all to obtain information about that country—that is, of a dependable character—from which conclusions could be drawn. Everybody seems to be at sea as to how best to proceed. For all the questions I asked while abroad, I have no clearer ideas about the Russian problem than when I left the United States.

"When I say I do not apprehend any real danger from Bolshevism outside of the defeated countries, I base that belief on the fact that in the past we have had no revolutions in victorious countries, generally speaking. Those who are victorious are looking forward to the fruits of victory, to a betterment of conditions. Such doctrines as Bolshevism spring out of the discouragement and despair of defeat. I do not expect to see any outbreak of Bolshevism in either Great Britain or France.

"England does not want anything in the way of territorial expansion out of the war. The British Empire is already very large and any considerable addition of territory would mean a greater burden. I think, however, the German colonies in South Africa must become a part of the British Empire; not because of any desire of territorial gain existing in England, but because the South African Federation will insist on it. From their standpoint the return of these colonies to Germany is unthinkable. South Africa will never have Germany for a neighbor again.

"In like manner, France does not demand or expect any great expansion of her colonial empire. The one great thought which France has in mind is terms of peace such as to protect her and the rest of civilization from another attack.

"France will not rest satisfied until Germany is rendered impotent to repeat the crime of 1914. It is the existence of this deep feeling in France—unintelligible to us in any terms of our own national experience—that has made that country skeptical of any theoretical scheme which will rid the world of violence, and she will have to be persuaded that whatever is proposed is practical.

"Italy desires to secure the Italian Irredenta and there would seem to be no important opposition, but her desire to control the Adriatic by the extension of her territory on the eastern coast is still a subject of discussion and uncertain as to outcome."

How Spending $2 Ended Their Worry Over Money Matters

This Couple Had Never Saved a Cent—Now Putting Money in the Bank Every Week on Exactly the Same Salary as Before

AFTER ten years of trying to save, Elizabeth and I didn't have a nickel laid away to show for all the many pay days that had come and gone. The best we could say was that most of the time we had managed to keep out of debt.

Then one day we found out what was wrong. We discovered a method for making each week's salary go around, with something left over to put in the bank.

We haven't become misers. Haven't cut down our scale of living. We indulge in more pleasures and amusements than ever before and without that old guilty feeling that we are spending money we can't afford. And yet we are now saving over $15 a week, regularly as clockwork, on exactly the same salary that until recently was never enough.

About the happiest day of our lives was when we made the deposit that brought our bank balance up over the $500 mark. To people who have never had any trouble in saving, $500 may seem nothing to brag about. But in our case, after ten years of being poor in spite of a fair salary, that small but steadily growing bank account of ours looks as big as a house.

It has given us a feeling of self-respect that we never knew in the days when we were always more or less strapped. For the first time in our married life, we've at last got a margin of safety between us and the poorhouse.

And best of all, we know that our present bank balance is only a starting point. We know that we have at last found the way to provide for a home of our own and for a comfortable old age, instead of always trusting to Providence. And incidentally, we get a whole lot more satisfaction out of the money we save than out of any money we ever spent.

Depends on What You Spend and Not on What You Earn

Looking back, I don't think there has ever been a time when we could have been accused of downright extravagance or four-flushing. Yet it was always tight squeezing to make both ends meet.

Elizabeth and I often talked it over. We realized that we were getting older every year, and that we were skating on thin ice. It worried me when I thought of what might happen if I should be laid up with sickness, or if any other unexpected development should cut off my income. Then there were the kiddies, with nothing set aside for their education. And no permanent roof over our heads. It wasn't a very pleasant outlook to think about.

We used to excuse ourselves by thinking that it was all a matter of income. But as I have since discovered, the size of one's income frequently has mighty little to do with it. It is usually the amount of outgo and not the amount of income that makes the difference between poverty and independence.

Breaking $5 Bills Is What Kept Us Broke.

My experience is that it isn't the big expenses that keep people down to their last dollar, but the little items. As I said to Elizabeth the other day, I can see now that it was breaking $5 and $10 bills that used to keep us broke. When it was a question of parting with a $5 bill or bigger in one lump, we gave the matter a little thought. But once the bill was broken, we were often careless with the change. That is where our money went—for little things that didn't do us any good. A quarter or a dollar by itself doesn't seem worth worrying about. But in the course of a year these small amounts all added together soon run up into big ones.

The President Sent For Me

Our salvation came about through a little fatherly interest on the part of the President of the Company I am with.

One day he called me into his office. "Carey," he said, "we have decided that we need a Chicago branch. I am going to send Bates out there as manager. I have been thinking about giving you his job here—which means a bigger salary, of course. But instead, I have decided to give you some advice, and then wait and see what happens."

He paused a while, looking me straight in the eye; then point-blank: "Carey, how much money have you saved?"

I didn't know just what he was driving at. Also I felt a bit cheap. But I owned up that my bank account was practically at zero.

"That's what I was afraid of," the president answered. "Maybe you think I am getting too personal. But here is where it affects me. I have noticed that the man who saves a little money as he goes along can always put a little more into his work than the fellow who is constantly worrying about his personal finances. If a man can't save, he is always in hot water. Sooner or later it is bound to hurt his work—bound to hold him back, and maybe stop his progress entirely.

"Then again—if a man can't manage his own pocket, how can he be expected to manage bigger things in business? That job of Bates' involves management. You are the logical man for the place—except for that one thing; you haven't made a success of managing your own affairs. Now maybe I can help you. Suppose you tell me what seems to be keeping you poor?"

Making It Easy to Save.

It was plain that the president was sincerely anxious to be helpful. But I had to admit that I didn't know myself just what the answer was.

"Well," he said, "perhaps I can tell you. Saving money isn't half as hard as most people think it is. The trouble is they go about it wrong. The only practical way to get ahead is to have a definite system or schedule, and stick to it. Split your salary up into proportionate parts—so much each week for rent, so much for clothing, etc. In business we call it the budget system. It's the only sound way.

"The budget system shows you what you can afford and what you can't—before your money is gone, and not after it is too late. It eliminates all that haphazard, hit-or-miss kind of spending that is keeping so many people in trouble.

"Now I'll tell you what you do. I know of a first-class method for adjusting outgo to income, and for laying something aside each week. It is called the Ferrin Money Saving Account Book. It shows you how to manage each week's salary so you'll usually come out ahead at the end of each week, month and year. It works just as well on a small income as on a big one. If given proper attention it keeps track of every cent—always shows in advance just where each dollar should go, and also where it actually does go. It's the best system for managing personal money matters I ever saw—so simple that a twelve-year-old boy or girl could use it; and takes only a couple of minutes a day.

"I use it myself—or rather my wife does. The other night she showed me how this book has helped her to save nearly $1,000 in the last six months—not by any skimping, but simply by keeping track of things and thus avoiding waste."

4 Years of Help for 50c a Year

"If I were you," the president continued, "I would try this Ferrin Account Book at once. It will cost you only $2, and is laid out to take care of all personal and household affairs for the next four years. That makes the cost only 50 cents a year. On your salary it ought to save at least $600 to $800 a year, without any unnecessary cutting down. Then let me know how it works out, and we'll talk about that new job again."

Well, I got the book. Elizabeth was delighted. Said she had no idea that money matters could be so simplified. For the first time in our lives we have learned how to manage. The big chief was right when he said that saving is easy if you go about it in a systematic way.

Incidentally, when I showed my bank book to the chief a few weeks ago, I got my chance at Bates' old job—and my pay has taken a jump of $1,000 a year. But we've learned our lesson—none of that old spend-in-a-hurry-and-repent-at-leisure this time on the strength of that raise; most of it is going into the bank, on top of at least $800 a year more that we have found we can save out of my former salary.

The Ferrin Money Saving Book helps to stop the leaks and wastes because it figures ahead and looks ahead from day to day and from one year's end to the other—all with only two or three minutes' attention a day.

Even if it helps you save only a few dollars a month it is still a mighty profitable investment. In these days every home should be on a business basis. Every dollar must be watched. If you don't need it, Uncle Sam does.

Whether You Have $500 a Year or $500 a Week

"How do they do it on his salary?" Probably you have often asked this question of yourself about this or that couple among your friends or neighbors. You know their income is smaller than yours; yet they seem to live just as well, and at the same time have a comfortable and constantly growing bank account, while you barely manage to keep up with expenses.

The Ferrin Money Saving Account Book gives the answer. It makes good management easy.

The secret is in the budget system—buying and spending according to a schedule instead of haphazardly. Whether your income is $500 a year or $500 a week or anywhere between, this book shows you how much you should save each week, and then almost automatically helps save it for you—shows you what proportion of your income should go for rent, how much for recreation, how much in the bank, and so on with every item. Then every day it checks up and shows you just where you stand—watches over your money both before and after you spend it.

It is laid out in columns that provide a daily record of every item of both income and outgo for four years—all you have to do is set down the amounts each day in the proper columns. No other writing required. No knowledge of bookkeeping necessary. The Ferrin Money Saving System is encompassed in a handsome Account Book bound in half blue silk cloth back—Cadet blue paper sides—turned edges—semi flexible—stamped in gold on front cover. It contains 112 pages, size 8¼x10½ inches.

5 Days' Free Examination—No Money Necessary

The Ferrin Money Saving Account Book is simplifying money matters for people all over the country—helping square up bills and debts—putting money in the bank for people who never before saved a cent. It will help you in the same way. We feel so sure of this that we offer to send you the book on approval for five days' free examination, so that you can see and judge for yourself.

You don't need to send us a single penny in advance—simply send your name and address on the coupon at the bottom of this page. Then after you look the book over and see how it simplifies the problem of saving, you can either send us $2 in full payment and keep the book, or else return the book and there will be nothing whatever to pay. War Paintings by an American Artist

Art at Home and Abroad

AMERICAN paintings of the war are just beginning to appear in the exhibitions. For four years newspapers and magazines have been filled with illustrations either from photographs or drawn by foreign artists showing fields of battle, engines of war, the newest airplanes and submarines, the physiognomies of officers, maps of Europe, and a thousand other items of interest concerning the most interesting war in history but it is only recently that the Americans who had a chance to make their rapid studies in color of episodes actually witnessed at the front and not of events occurring many miles back of it have returned to work up these records in the light of memory and a New York studio.

Samuel J. Woolf, who is holding an exhibition of war pictures at the Milch Gallery, was not attached to the army, but he had permission from the Government to work directly at the front. Mr. Gallatin in his preface to the catalogue of the exhibition gives the facts of the artist's experience. Mr. Woolf went to the front, he says, "as a correspondent of a magazine." He also carried letters from the War Department and the Secretary of the Navy. Accordingly, he not only secured permission to visit the training camps, but also the various sectors of the lines held by the American troops. He lived with our men, eating and sleeping with them; at one time he drove an ambulance, at another acted as cook. Once he was wounded by a piece of stray shrapnel and another time he was gassed. Not that these experiences helped to develop his artistic talents, but they did saturate him with his subject and enabled him to produce this most interesting series of paintings and drawings.

This saturation with his subject is the first essential in an artist's mental equipment. He must know his subject so well that he can forget it when he begins to paint and think only of his paintings. But this means many a battle fought and won over that insidious enemy to conscience known by the false title of conscientiousness.

Fine Quality of Sketches.

The present exhibition, occurring with perilous promptitude after Mr. Woolf's return from Europe, indicates that he has not yet quite won all these battles, but it also shows him fighting like a very good soldier. In some of the canvases he is overanxious to tell you the details of his story. He interrupts his artistic message with accidents of pose and color and light and dark that detract from its force and intensity. This you see most clearly by comparing the finished pictures with the studies for them made on the spot. These studies are beautiful notations of experience. The color rings clear and vigorous, the line is swift, just enough is said to give you the impression of what is going on and not to hold your attention to insignificant detail. The fully developed pictures are commonplace in comparison.

Occasionally, however, we find among the completed pictures one that shows the artist in command of his intelligence, remembering with cool judgment the emotional mood in which he made his sketch, and recapturing it with the skill that demands the utmost of concentration. There is the painting called "By the Dawn's Early Light," a tangle of soldiers and barbed wire crossing the composition, and above these the lovely morning sky, pure and pale, across which waver the inevitable and ominous crows. In the sketch and to some extent in the picture the emphasis is placed on the beauty of the sky and the color of the marred land, itself touched to beauty by the faint morning mists. The line of men is a blue drift of color, all the desperate tragedy of the scene is bathed in the ineffable fairness of nature, and thus its cruelty is given added poignancy to sensitive minds.

Tragic Subjects.

The other pictures are more obviously illustrative. In one we see the marines at Château-Thierry, urging forward through falling walls and in the face of fire and shell. In another we see men going "over the top" and falling backward, wounded or dead. Another shows the fate of a sniper, caught in the branches of a tree and already marked by the hovering crows. There are horrors enough, but the public has perhaps more courage to face these horrors than it had before the armistice, and an American public wants the truth. This Mr. Woolf has given them so far as he has had power to reveal it. He has not made a pretty war nor has he made warfare seem glorious and desirable. His pictures hardly would be chosen for recruiting posters, but they are, we may well believe, what 90 per cent. of the soldiers in active service will recognize as the facts of practical experience.

Some of the facts wear the aspect of fiction, as in the picture showing a soldier fallen desperately wounded in the interior of a church directly under the crucifix. The implied connection between the soldier's sacrifice and that of Christ has a look of prearrangement, almost of theatrical arrangement, that will be resented by the strict realist. But the thing occurred precisely as represented, and in Mr. Woolf's presence, while the soldier was busy taking down some of the paintings in the unroofed church to save them from destruction.

ALLIED ARTISTS OF AMERICA.

The Allied Artists are holding their sixth annual exhibition in the galleries of the Fine Arts Building, telling over again with conspicuous fluency the familiar story of American woods and meadows and rivers and seas, of American types of childhood and womanhood, with an occasional digression in favor of American man, and telling this always interesting story in a strictly national idiom. Most of the pictures have the American rather than an individual accent—if you should see them in a foreign gallery, that is, you would recognize them as compatriots one and all, but unless you were an uncommonly devoted gallery visitor, you might be ever so little puzzled as to which of your countrymen painted the individual examples.

And this is not altogether a defect. The exhibition is an extremely pleasant one and gives a general impression of art as an absorbing, although hardly an exciting, occupation. The artists are captains of their brush; most of them can do about what they start in to do, and they are very much interested in doing it. If they have done it often enough to modify your first tingling pleasure in the work of their hands, perhaps that is as much your own fault as theirs. It is sometimes a mark of age and sometimes only the mark of a ruminative mind to like to stick by the same kind of reading and the same kind of cooking and the same kind of art during the little bit of life you have to work with.

Let us then give thanks that the exhibition in the Fine Arts Building permits us to browse contentedly about and find our particularly succulent bits at our leisure without having to bother to ask ourselves if we really do like this or that novelty. It is certain that we really do like a large proportion of the pictures and especially the sketches exhibited. Christina Morton's Domenica subject, for example; how enjoyable it is both as technical achievement and as witty comment on a rewarding topic. The high key of her color and the elegance of her forms lend distinction to a type of subject that easily degenerates into picturesqueness. Watteau or Pater might thus have wandered through a plantain market and translated it into an idyl of festive industry.

Harry Hoffman's "Sponge Market, Nassau" is handled in a decorative spirit, with restraint and skill. The roof and walls of the shed are cleverly treated as an architectural framework for the blue and white of sea and sails beyond, and the big slack curves of the spongy masses within the shed are interestingly contrasted with the sharp angles and straight lines of the masts and the walls.

There are a number of cattle pictures, and most of us find the dumb beasts pleasant to see about in our reaction against the strain of war. They are pleasanter when they are just resting in a meadow dappled with sun and shade, as Mr. Volkert paints them, than when they are contributing their item to the war news by working with the women in the fields under the title "The Unconquered," as Mr. Newell very pertinently paints them.

Agreeable Portraits.

A merry comment on the brighter side of the war sentiment is seen in Captain H. Ledyard Towle's portrait of a little boy, wide-faced and bright-eyed, in a cap with the now familiar red pompom. The title is "One of Those French Sailors." Mr. Towle also is responsible for a freely painted portrait of a gray and blonde old man, "Sergeant Jim." Orlando Rouland shows a carefully painted portrait of Edwin Winter, quiet in color and searching in its description of character, and a striking portrait of Miss Margaret Wilson. Christina Morton's "Portrait of My Mother" is one of the good things in the exhibition, slightly austere, touched with the spirit of reticence, cool and fair in color, and distinguished in handling. G. L. Nelson paints "Julius Kayser" with much sincerity of execution, and makes an interesting composition with the aid of the beautiful old chair that appears in many of his pictures. Bernhard Gutman's ruddy baby is painted with a forthright vigor of workmanship that is especially inspiriting in a type of subject usually sentimentalized. "My Brother-in-Law," by Ernest L. Ipsen, is a fine portrait to have in the family, snapping with life and character.

Subject Pictures and Landscapes.

Among the subject pictures Oscar Fehrer's "Reflecting and Reflections," with its mid-Victorian young woman and its modernist curtain, is painted with Mr. Fehrer's customary adroitness, but the predominating reds belong to families as congenial as Montague and Capulet. A decorative lady crouching amid daffodils and peacocks and oranges and various exotic birds as lively as to color scheme and rhythmic as to line, is by Norwood MacGilvary. Its boldness is in its favor, and it is easy to think of it used as a mural decoration to be seen from a considerable distance and producing a very happy effect. "The Guardian" by Andrew J. Schwartz, is a gray picture of obvious symbolism. A genuine satisfaction is gained from Mr. Potthast's beach scene, a boy and a girl racing down the sands toward a blue and sparkling sea.

The landscapes are quite up to the average of the Academy exhibition—a crisp "Winter Morning" by F. W Hutchinson, a very fine canvas by Mr. Bruestle, filled with air and authoritative in its tree and cloud forms; a lovely landscape by Guy Wiggins with bare tree branches making a delicate intricate design against the blue and gray of their background, and scattered patches of russet leafage enlivening the foreground with a dusky warmth of color.

Ossip Linde has a large canvas of almost cloying richness, and a more vigorous study of the rocks at Gloucester. There are characteristic works by Clark Voorhees, James S. King, Eliot Clark, H. Giles, W. A. Singer, Lester Boronda, Robert Vonnoh, Cullen Yates, Hobart Nichols, Gustave Wiegand, Roy Brown, Ernest Albert, and many others.

The sculpture includes a charming group of two figures by Bessie Potter Vonnoh, Julio Kilenyi's "President Wilson" plaque, Massey Rhind's "Robbie Burns," engagingly casual; a garden group by Edward McCartan, and other things by C. S. Paolo, Isidor Konti, Cartaino Scarpetta, Lindsay Morris Sterling, and Charles Keck.

The exhibition lasts until Feb 10.

JOY IN LIFE FOR THE BLIND

Self-Confidence Restored to the Soldier Patients in General Hospital 7, Near Baltimore---Dancing as an Aid in Overcoming Awkwardness and Diffidence

All the Soldiers at This Dance in the Evergreen Hospital Are Blind. Hughes Co.

A FEW days ago a reporter from THE TIMES MAGAZINE visited General Hospital 7 at Rowland Park, in the outskirts of Baltimore, and during the afternoon one of the patients took the visitor for a little walk about the grounds and out on the highroad. The patient—he was a Sergeant and his name was Zimmerman—was a big, jolly fellow who carried himself with an air of fine, erect confidence as one who steps boldly and happily out into the world, and who bore no sign of being a hospital patient beyond a slight, scarcely noticeable disfigurement on one side of his face, and the fact that he held a cane in his hand. He walked with the visitor across the big athletic field of the hospital, over to the beautiful Elizabethan garden that is one of the "sights" of Rowland Park.

"This is such a lovely place to bring your friends when they come to see you," he said. And then he took the stranger out the gate to the broad motor road, and as they walked along talked a little of the war—he had been injured at Gondricourt months ago, and his only regret was that he had been so soon put out of the fighting.

"I'd like to have seen more action," he said. "But, then, if I had it all to do over, I wouldn't want it to be any different. • • •

"I run up to New York sometimes," he went on. "Perhaps I shall see you sometime again," he added, courteously. And then came a whirring noise on the quiet road.

"There's an automobile," said Sergeant Zimmerman. "Look out!"

They were nearing a crossroads, and the reporter looked ahead and on each side, and saw nothing. The question, "Where?" was natural enough, and the hospital patient laughed.

"Just behind us," he said. "Here it is," and as a big, very quiet car went skimming by the soldier laughed again, a very gay and gleeful laugh, indeed.

"I think I can see better than you," he said, "even if I am blind."

Sergeant Zimmerman has lived in a completely darkened world since he was injured at Gondricourt early last Spring. But it is not only—not even chiefly—because of his physical proficiency that one must fairly pinch one's self to remember that he is blind. The wonder to the stranger is not his skill in moving about, his keenly trained hearing; it is his state of mind, his simple self-reliance, his lack of self-consciousness—in a word, his complete normality. He walks, talks, laughs precisely like men who can see; he has no hesitation of movement, none of the curious, slightly abnormal tone of voice that we associate with blindness, no suggestion of that so-called "happy smile of the blind," which is so often a smile of appeal, and, at its best, of resignation: he looks straight in one's face when he talks; furthermore, Sergeant Zimmerman's manner allows no jot of "pity," of special consideration, on the part of the people with whom he is talking; there is not even any avoidance of the terms and figures of sight. Sergeant Zimmerman is not a man who is "afflicted": he is a man who has a handicap—and who is overcoming it.

And the questions that the reporter took to Major N. I. Ardan, M. C., commanding officer of General Hospital 7; to Charles F. F. Campbell, Assistant Director of the Red Cross Institute for the Blind that is associated with the hospital, and to Professor Harold Whitehead, the institution's educational director, had to do with this matter of the blinded soldier's state of mind. General Hospital 7 is the institution to which are sent all the United States soldiers, sailors, and marines who have lost their sight—that is, men who are totally blind or whose eyes have been so affected that they will never again be able to make their living by their use. Every one knows, more or less specifically, that the Government trains these blinded men to be able citizens again. But what of their personal tragedy, the long prospect of darkened years, the hopelessness, and—as the glory of their sacrifice begins to dim—the dull bitterness of a life so piteously maimed? Can these men be made happy again, as well as capable? And, if so, how can it be done? Is Sergeant Zimmerman a type? What does it?

Sergeant Zimmerman's attitude is typical, one learns in a very little while at Evergreen—as the hospital is called. He has been there longer than most of the others; he has progressed further in physical dexterity; but his spirit is the spirit of Evergreen—a spirit of perfect normality, of natural cheerfulness, of undisturbed mental poise. One might even think—looking at the group of soldiers chatting and smoking, for instance, in the big library—that all this "just happened," that there must be some inherent virtue of courage and happiness in being blind; but there isn't. The state of mind of the men at Evergreen has been studied, toiled over, determinedly achieved by the people who have the work in hand; the psychological side of the patients' treatment has been given the most expert and devoted attention; there is no other institution like this in the United States; with the exception of St. Dunstan's in London there is no institution like it in the world; psychologically it rests its treatment upon the refusal to admit blindness as an affliction, upon the repudiation of pity and resignation, the proud holding fast to normality and normal interests. The limitations which the generations have set upon the blind man are not accepted here.

That sounds very simple. What they do at Evergreen is to work it out in detail, through the reception of the men when they first come in, sick, through their alimentary training in caring for themselves, through work and play, and on into the matter of their families' readjustment to the new conditions. When they first tell the men that they are blind they throw out the hard fact as a challenge. But back of that, as of everything, is the watchful spirit that is perhaps best summed up in Major Ardan's first remark to Mr. Campbell, when the officer came a few months ago to take charge of the hospital, "What I am interested in is the men's point of view."

And when the men are up and about, one of the first things they do is to learn to dance. But they don't dance just with their teachers, or with each other, as a part of some special kind of exercise. They have girls out from Baltimore, or they get their friends from home, and they have parties as gay and as normal as any Yale Prom.

"It would do your heart good," laughed Major Ardan, "to see them turkey trot!" And he added:

"Some of the men who've been in the awkward squad over there get to be wonderful dancers here."

Professor Whitehead struck another basic note of the psychological side of the treatment at Evergreen when he continued:

"You see, these men do not live in a world of the blind. There is no 'blind community' idea here. They live in the world of sighted men, mixing constantly with people who can see.

"Take the dances, as an example."

WILLIAM HOHENZOLLERN, DESERTER

Maximilian Harden Denounces Former Emperor, Tells of Ballin's Vain Effort to Warn Him, Reveals Untold Facts About the German Collapse, and Repudiates Communism

Prince Max of Baden, Who Prevented General von Linsingen from Meeting German Revolution with Shot and Shell.

Maximilian Harden, Editor of Die Zukunft. He Calls William Hohenzollern a Deserter.

General von Linsingen, Military Governor of Brandenburg When German Imperial Government Collapsed.

Maximilian Harden denounces the Kaiser as a deserter and presents vividly many hitherto unpublished facts about the collapse of the German military monarchy in the Nov. 23 issue of his paper, Die Zukunft, just received here. The entire number is devoted to an article, "Der Götterfunke," [The Spark of the Gods,] parts of which are translated herewith.

By MAXIMILIAN HARDEN.

WE had grown accustomed to the belief that a triumphal victory would surely crown our work. There was no psychological or spiritual solution in this war at any time: none that summoned Germans. And in the same second in which the hope of victory fell to pieces, all the force vanished, the will was withered, there leaped up in the minds of the responsible—the all too responsible—parties the terrified realization: "It's all over. Everything is irrevocably lost!"

We had made the institutions of the monarchy, the military monarchy, which was only an instrument for a particular hour in human history—an end in and for itself. In order to preserve the monarchy, in order to preserve militarism, and to guard under all circumstances the glory of the army, everything seemed permitted; even a campaign against the moral forces, against the spiritual forces of the world, seemed justified and even sanctified. * * *

And when it was demonstrated that all force was still not powerful enough to prevent the turn of Fortune's wheel, then there remained not even the narrowest footpath for the persons of that desolate World of Power on which they could find their way or escape. They had tried to preserve the gentleman who stood (and who more frequently stirred in feverish movements) at the head of the empire, to preserve him intact in his artificial world, according to the old saying that had ruled the court here for three decades: "Do not tell the Kaiser anything disagreeable! His Majesty needs the sun!"

In Hamburg there lived a good man, who unfortunately now also has left us, Albert Ballin. A man friendly to and obligated to the Kaiser, (perhaps the Kaiser was even more obligated to the merchant,) a man of thoroughly capitalistic thought, which he neither concealed nor wished to conceal, but a man full of honest love of humanity and in his brightest hours a wise man. He was removed from the "sun" and the "need of the sun" ever since. In the very first months of the war (and I must admit I was his accomplice therein) he had tried to bring some clear facts before the eye of the Most High, the Ever-Joyous. Ballin at that time urged a dignified agreement with our foes.

A furious scene ensued. A lady's fan threatened the cheek of the shipping magnate; the only German who, upon his world field, had been victorious over England and who had, nevertheless, won and kept the confidence of the Britons, was suspected of being an Anglo-maniac, was slandered and shoved away from the vicinity of the Follower of Will-o'-the-Wisps, who used with a smile to say to him: "You ascended to rule a year before I did."

He had ever and again tried to help the Kaiser and to serve the empire. In vain! But in August, 1918, those in the Ludendorff region, where his warning letters had long been left unanswered, addressed themselves to him with the plea to enlighten the All-Highest Lord about the realities of the situation, which that One, therefore, did not yet know; in August, after our armies had been overrun; when the hand of the clock pointed to 12.

True, there was then still a Chancellor, a Government, a Supreme War Administration. Nevertheless, it was found necessary to call upon "the shelved Water Jew," as he had been called since the beginning of the war, because no man in office wished to expose himself to the danger of ungracious treatment. In those days we sat together very long, and I tried to formulate the needs of the hour in my way. Then Ballin went to Wilhelmshöhe.

But he did not succeed in getting private speech with the Kaiser. The latter avoided the truth that might break through in a private conversation, and interposed in the interview his Chief of the Cabinet, von Berg, who was very skillful in his way, and who carefully saw to it that this conversation should not lead to any depths. Ballin traveled sadly home, and wrote to me: "You will consider me an ass or a bungler, because I did not reach the main point."

I had no doubt that he did all that was humanly possible, fearlessly but fruitlessly; but I recognized more clearly than ever the impossibility of our condition. We had a State and Empire, wherein, even in the last extremities, in the gravest crisis, it was impossible to say or to show to the gentleman whose signature was in the last analysis necessary in every decision, what the actual facts were. * * * No one dared to loosen the bandage from the eyes of the nation or of its leader. Those who were called in for the decision fell into the disgraceful position of those who knew themselves to be bankrupt and for that very reason were unwilling to draw up a balance account. * * *

There were among us two worlds, that had scarcely touched one another, the military and the civil worlds; and these were suddenly startled as by a thunderbolt. The militaristic world was startled out of the deepest darkness of the illusion of certain triumph into which it had been forced, an illusion bred of postal embargoes, false reports, and a propaganda of a ruthless, lying, but well-intended sort. How could army and navy suspect that the armistice was demanded by the Supreme Command of its own urgent need? To them it seemed a whimpering produced by bourgeoise-democratic "defeatist" weakness, the result of a despicable "Jew's fear"; and they decided to resist with all forces such a despicable ending of the fight. And from this will arose the plan to let the fleet sail out and attack, and if necessary be destroyed by the English. This would mean no peace for the time being, but they hoped it would set new fire to the war on the mainland.

But all this had to conceal itself in darkness as long as Power and Meanness each day in noble companionship throttled every impulse of truth. It is because day after day in the misery of those demoralizing times, now happily put behind us, lies were extorted from weaklings by the most repulsive methods, and truth stifled on the lips of all who protested—it is for that reason that we are where we are today.

No politician had a part in the mutiny of the fleet. The sailors and the fleet had been told that a "naval evolution" drill was intended. The first suspicions woke when they noticed that most of the older and married officers were furloughed for the time of the "evolutions." The bluejackets on the Markgraf and on the Baden first put their heads together and whispered, "What's up?" From the pantries and the kitchens the stewards heard conversations through the portières that must strengthen the suspicion "We are to attack, to go down!" Thereupon the decision was made: "We desire neither to act against the wish of the Government, which is for the first time a people's Government and desirous of procuring an armistice and peace, nor to permit our lives to be tossed away for a cause which cannot be saved in this way anyhow. We shall do all that is necessary for the defense of our coast, but make no attack which is not deemed necessary by the civil powers, but which, indeed, they consider dangerous and hurtful to their aim of peace."

The squadrons sailed to the mine zone, no further. One fire went out, then another; a ship left the line. They had to turn back. They sailed again, and again they had to return. The sailors seized power without any considerable resistance on the part of the officers. They sailed to the Hansa cities, from which the suddenly risen sparks of the revolution spread afar into the mainland, and the revolution took place more swiftly, less bloodily, than was ever to have been expected. * * *

But in Berlin the system of madness and frivolity raged on undisturbed. No one was to speak a true word. Lies were rewarded with honorary decorations. The people were not permitted to hear anything, to know anything of what was taking place and coming to be. Confused rumors seeped through. Something's up in Kiel. Horrible things are a-doing in Bremen, Lübeck, Hamburg—plunder, mutiny, murder! In hundreds of press offices sat officers and lawyers wearing field-gray garb, (it is true, for years attorneys of the law devoted themselves to the most disgraceful hangman's service in the cause of injustice,) and they decided: "It cannot be printed! Verboten!"

Whoever writes the history of the war must make use of the "verboten" tags that rained each day in the newspaper offices; must first teach these men what was happening, and what therefore must not be printed. The lie stank to heaven; it stank above all the stench of blood. And unsuspecting Germans swore that to them was flowing the purest stream of unadulterated truth, and that their "official reports" were of bronze! * * *

A plan had been elaborated to the smallest detail as to how the rebelling capital could be subdued. There was no plan, alas, for the case if, as happens today, our poor, overpowered army had to be brought back home in haste. No preparations had been made for that; they had counted only on triumph, and even in the Autumn of 1914 had reserved windows for witnessing the triumphal homecoming. But for fighting down the rebellious capital every detail had been carefully planned in advance. And whoever went through the streets on Nov. 8 felt the breath of this spirit stirring. Soldiers, machine guns, automobiles

The Child Who Won the Hearts of All

A true-life story showing how a woman successfully dealt with the responsibilities of motherhood and brought up a child whom everyone admired.

A BEAUTIFUL and wonderful experience it was to see the growing-up of little Judith. The pinky, chubby tot with her gurgles and soft coos of delight tugged at the heart-strings of everyone who saw her.

As babyhood grew into girlhood, the blossoming forth was a joy to behold. All the lovable traits and good qualities which parents hope their children will have seemed to be combined in little Judith.

The joy of it all was that the mother's friends were as completely captivated by the charms of Judith as was the mother herself. For whenever these friends met their first remark would always be, "Have you seen Judith lately?—Isn't she the most adorable child!"—and "Oh, how I envy Mrs. Garrison!—A wonderful mother and a wonderful child!"

One bright sunshiny day, while taking my morning walk in the park, I found Judith and her mother playing hide-and-seek. Judith's mother and I were old friends. We sat down on the grass together for a visit—and Judith played around.

Of course, we talked about the child, for I loved her almost as much as her mother did. As I watched this remarkable child playing around, I thought of the tremendous responsibility of the mother. I asked her how she had met it. And this is what she told me:

"When Judith was born, my first feeling was one of utter helplessness. I knew nothing about caring for a child. I was afraid—afraid that I might do the wrong thing. I wondered if other mothers had felt that same haunting fear for their child's welfare. And even though Judith thrived under my care, I never could quite shake off the feeling that I might do the wrong thing.

"Never shall I forget the day when my helplessness overwhelmed me completely. Judith was about 2½ years old—just old enough to begin to play, to notice things and to ask questions.

"I had corrected her for striking me in the face with a ball. Then I went to get the ball and had my back to her for a moment. As I turned around with the ball, I saw something that nearly broke my heart! There was Judith, in an attitude of defiance, making a face at me!

"For a moment I couldn't move nor speak. I sank down on the floor—helpless. Was it possible that Judith didn't love me and had lost confidence in me?

"For days I struggled with the problem, haunted by the fear that my child didn't love me. Then I realized that something had to be done, and done quickly. So I went to my friends and asked frankly for advice. If I had followed all that advice I shudder to think of what might have happened to Judith!

"By good fortune I learned of the Parents' Association, formed for the purpose of giving the very information I was seeking. I wrote—and became a member. I was astounded! For they told me all the things I'd been puzzling over, and lots of surprising things I'd never even thought of.

"These revelations gave me a most wonderful feeling of confidence. I learned how to control Judith—to break naughty little habits just taking root, and to nourish the sweet ways which everyone loved. And then . . . but there's no need to go into details, for you can see what it has done. I give The Parents' Association full credit."

The heart of every mother thrills with pride when she hears some whole-souled, notable man proudly stand up and say, as Lincoln said, "All that I am and all that I ever hope to be I owe to my mother." Never was a greater truth uttered than this. For the course of one's whole life is shaped in childhood.

There is no greater responsibility in the world than that of being a parent. A child is what its parents make it. Heredity, environment and education all count, it's true. But all these points are as nothing compared with the right training in a child's tender and flexible years.

To love and cherish one's children is the joy of parenthood. But something more than love is due a child. And this is the right training—training that will not only give health and brightness, but will equip the child to become a power in the world.

The Parents' Association is an organization devoted to scientific child training. It was founded by Professor Ray C. Beery, A. B., M. A. (Harvard and Columbia), after years of scientific research and practical experience in child training. Professor Beery is regarded by those who know his work as one of the greatest authorities on child culture. Probably no man has a better knowledge of human nature or a more sympathetic understanding of children.

The moment you become a member of The Parents' Association you are given information of the most vital nature. Avenues of knowledge which will astound you are opened up to you. Things that have perplexed you, worried you, will become as clear as day to you. You will stand amazed at the tremendous possibilities of child training. And, best of all, you can apply this vital information immediately. You will marvel at the remarkable and instant results.

But here's the way to get the whole wonderful story. The Parents' Association will be glad to send you its new booklet entitled "New Methods in Child Training." Simply ask for the booklet. Use the coupon or write a post-card or a letter—whichever you prefer. Booklet will go to you immediately, entirely free of charge or obligation.

Some things you owe to yourself. But your greatest duty to yourself is as nothing compared with your duty to your children. So for the sake of your children, write for this free booklet now—before you lay this magazine aside. You can rest assured that the most wonderful day in your life will be the day you receive this amazing booklet. So write for it now while the Association is distributing these booklets free.

Wilt-Proof Tomato Born of Marriage of Plebeian and Aristocratic Plants---Siberian Wheat Wedded to Western Grain to Help the Farmer

EACH year the supply of tomatoes, and consequently the price, has been affected by the tomato wilt, a mysterious disease which has swept over whole regions specially devoted to the cultivation of tomatoes. In Georgia last year the losses reported from this cause were 50 per cent. of the crop. Virginia's crop was cut by 10,000 tons, Maryland's by 25,000, and so through other States.

But there was a ten-acre field of tomatoes which defied attack by the wilt. Diseased plants were brought in contact with the growing field, and the tomatoes showed themselves wilt-proof to the end. This year seeds from the wilt-resisting plants will be sent to all the tomato-growing sections, and the ultimate result, it is expected, will be a saving of millions of dollars and a decided increase in the yield of tomatoes an acre.

This was one of many experiments conducted on a 400-acre Government-owned farm in Alexandria County, Va., across the Potomac from Washington. It is one of the largest highly specialized farms in the world, and is operated by the Bureau of Plant Industry of the Department of Agriculture. The specialists of the bureau call the Arlington Experiment Farm their open-air laboratory. Forty branches of the bureau were carrying on tests last year on their special tracts.

Testing the Yield and Quality of Vegetables Grown in Shade and Those Grown in the Open. Superior Qualities of Tobacco Are Produced Under Similar Cloth Shades in Certain Portions of the United States.

For instance, 200 varieties of lettuce were being watched there to see which was the all-around best. Seventy varieties of sweet potatoes were in a similar competition. Known sweet potato plants are not steady performers. Hills frequently occur with practically no yield—a few stringy roots. To find a plant which would do business in every hill would add fifty bushels to the average yield. That kind of a plant—a more energetic sweet potato than is now known is now being sought at the Arlington Experiment Farm.

Many strangers arrive at the farm every year from Europe, Asia, and South America. They are new seeds and new plants. Marriages take place to add to the number of bushels per acre, and these would be called as romantic, if humans are concerned, as was the love affair of Romeo and Juliet. In one case the Romeo is a Siberian wheat of superb Northern vigor, built up through centuries of resistance to extreme cold. Juliet is of our own West, of a strain famous for its golden abundance, but for all her beauty susceptible to cold with kinsfolk who—black Western prairies have perished by the thousand. What is wanted therefore—to increase our yield of wheat per acre—is a progeny which shall combine Romeo's hardihood and Juliet's abundance.

So the marriage takes place, with a chief scientist as the best man and other scientists as the ushers. The time set for the ceremony is as ideal as any human bride and bridegroom could ask for, in the bloom season. Juliet's bridal toilet has one peculiarity. The ends of the stamens are cut off, and the pollen from the Romeo bloom is sprinkled in its place.

The cost of such a marriage is sometimes considerable. In the development of certain varieties of grain the expense of the mating, including the succeeding tests, has amounted to $10,000. On account of the heavy outlay the first offspring of Romeo and Juliet are placed in a cage for protection from the birds—a wire netting eight feet from the ground, so as to give the cultivator room to move about, is placed over the progeny of the Siberian and the American, and the sides are also inclosed by the netting.

The Arlington Experiment Farm has 1,500 different grain seeds. In the fruit section there are 700 varieties of apples, 100 of grapes, and 100 of peaches. In the flower section, to mention two kinds, are found 800 varieties of roses and 400 of peonies.

Two chief methods of procedure are followed by the scientists. To increase the yield per acre is the main problem. This may be done by evolving, through the mixing of varieties, a better seed; or by finding a cure for a disease which is making heavy ravages in existing excellent varieties. In the new tomato plant the scientists' plan of campaign is well illustrated. Cures were sought for the tomato wilt. This involved a long and exact process. First the tomato wilt germ must be found and isolated. That meant patient laboratory work in the Bureau of Plants at Washington. There was one infallible proof—that the germ would produce the wilt in a healthy plant. This done, efforts were made to control it by chemical sprays.

Sometimes success is complete in such experiments, as when a few years ago the bureau discovered a lime sulphur mixture which would destroy orchard scale of the most malignant kind, a pest that ruins not only the fruit crop but, if unchecked, saps the life of the tree itself. But in this case no cure was found for the tomato wilt. Therefore the other line of attack was adopted. A plant was found which would resist the disease. At length, after hunting far and wide, a tomato plant was found that would not take the blight no matter how exposed.

Success, however, was yet a long way off, for this plant yielded a small scrawny tomato, utterly unsuited for commercial use, a vegetable n'er-do-well and loafer which had the one quality of a magnificent constitution. The scientists, because of his physique, resolved to make a desirable vegetable citizen of him. The first step upward must be a suitable marriage. A bride in a different world was sought, a bride in a most industrious, prolific family of tomatoes. The vagabond, in the interest of food production in the United States, was mated to an aristocrat; and after several years of progressive experimenting with the progeny the scientists of the Plant Bureau think they are safe in announcing a wilt-proof tomato.

Plant breeding is only one of a group of experiments carried on at the Arlington Experiment Farm. Soils from various States are tested there, not by chemical analysis, but where they can be watched continuously in open-air environment. The soil as it comes from the different States is placed in stone cylinders, in layers, just as it was taken from the ground. The plant is grown in the cylinder, set upright in the ground. Records are kept of each test, and the final result shows what each soil needs in the way of fertilizer to make it produce the best results. These records are completed for leading varieties of crops.

A row of laboratories is part of the equipment of the farm. One of these is now conducting important experiments in the prevention of waste farm crops.

"A farmer has a crop of peaches ready to pick," said Professor Lee Cleveland Corbett, horticulturist of the Bureau of Plant Industry, who has been one of the scientists most actively connected with the Arlington Farms, "but rain sets in. The fruit grower cannot pick peaches in the rain, and if he did they would not keep. By the time it stops raining and he can get on the ground it is too late to ship the peaches to market. They would be too soft. The commercial canners do not want them; they have contracted in advance for their needs, and, besides, by the time the peaches went over the railroads to the canneries they would be too ripe for use. How to save these peaches for human food—there is a conservation of far-reaching importance, for each year thousands of bushels go to ruin.

"Another problem of the same kind: City people sometimes buy a farm and find the ground under a large orchard fairly covered with apples of good appearance. They cry out at the waste, and wonder why the farmer does not ship the apples to market, even if he hardly makes expenses. As a matter of fact, in most such cases the farmer would not get enough out of the deal to pay the freight, not to mention the cost of packing and the barrels.

"There is only one solution to these and other similar wastes of farm crops: Canning or drying on the farm."

There is not only a best kind of a canning plant to be devised, but a best method of preparing the fruit, cooking it, sealing the cans, to be found. All these are now being worked out, and when completed, a home canning system will be placed before the farmer intact. The result will be a new resource of food for the American home from what hitherto was waste. The war, with its stern demand to employ every available means to accomplish a single purpose, has emphasized the importance of making every pound of food grown count, and the momentum from the war saving campaign promises to work a revolution in methods of economy on the farm.

loaded down with arms. "Tomorrow it's going to be red!"

That street fighting did not ensue is to the credit, the last credit, of Prince Max of Baden. Had he not, in the course of the evening, been brought to see the wisdom of compelling the resignation of Herr von Linsingen, the Supreme Commander in the Province, who, with almost pathetic simplicity, had tried to have the revolution "verboten" by means of placards, then the morning of German freedom would have risen out of streams of the purest blood of its citizens.

But red, as the police spies had foretold, was that morning. * * * There was a revolution; a German revolution, a very orderly one, a highly respectable revolution. It was the same nearly everywhere throughout the empire. Then you saw how rotten and crumbling were the walls, how thin had become the golden circlets; twenty dynasties and more were wafted away into dust as by a breath of wind. * * *

And, I must add the fact that one of them, the All Highest, at once betook himself to a foreign land. Even the Supreme War Lord, before the conclusion of peace, chose the deserter's path. This fact must at last have opened the eyes of even those who still believed in that shimmering idol. I do not wish to provide either you or myself with the cheap pleasure to say those words about this man which will be said on some calmer day. But who frightened him away? No one in the people or army is guilty of the fact that a back-door exit was selected to Holland, and that by that fact itself every warrior and every official was relieved of his oath of fealty. No one threatened the lives or bodies of any of these princes; and I had expected that they would rather quickly choose an honest soldier death or sojourn further in our midst to try to make their gifts useful in some way to the nation. But that the First Federal Prince of yesterday, the King of Prussia, fled from the field to the frontier, even his most devoted officer and liegeman of yesterday will not forgive him that.

Now all the secret plottings and writings must be brought to the light; must, not because the people's wrath wishes to rage its full measure, but because good sense and the highest policy demand that now, more powerfully than ever before, the nation must be shown how necessary and inevitable the overthrow of the military monarchy was. Hesitate no longer, ye who now rule, to publish the unambiguous proofs in the archives, to unmask the liars! Tear the veil from the shame that allowed this indignation to grow!

It is the sorrow of this hour that the sense of high exaltation, of fervent serious enthusiasm, has not yet been attained. * * * Be conscious in every hour, at each pulse beat, that the revolution was not a way out of the difficulty, not a subterfuge, not a necessary evil of self-defense; no, it was a gigantic step upward, into the heights, to Freedom, the joyous sanctification of all the national and international future. * * *

After all this, does one dare to count up the few unpleasant happenings that spot the day of our revolution? As far as can be humanly foreseen, they will not be the last. But an evil continuing down to the very depths can result only if, after the overthrow of the prison walls and the razing of the confining barriers, the revolutionizing of the spirit fails to take place in the people, and if in a new form the evil returns from which the empire and people became sick unto death.

I have referred in passing to one root of our evils: the means had become an end unto itself. The army and the monarchy, which should have been a means to insure and exalt the forces of the soul, to guard and increase the national prosperity—these had become ends in themselves; existed imperiously as self-providers, raged and exhausted themselves. The enormous war also was not to be a means to an honorable peace; the nauseating industrial warfare was to appear fleckless, and with a coinage of lies it gathered a usurious splendor.

Now, the revolution must remain a means to the new order of things, and must not become an end unto itself. What is to be done in order to guard it against blind floundering in the swamp of vanities or wild mushroom growth into autocratic ambition? From a hundred bourgeoise choruses rings the answer: "We must support the new Government before the eyes of all!" * * *

I do not blame people for a true conversion of principle. But for those who yesterday distilled public opinion and bottled it; those who sat in press offices, circulated patrioteers' lies, exported truth abroad and thus emptied Truth's warehouse here at home; those who tried in prose and verse to befog us ever more densely, and who now try the same tricks and arts and curtseys in the service of something fundamentally different—for those I can find no respect. Where are the marquises, the sincere feudal lords of 1918, who would rather die than cast aside their opinions like a sweaty shirt? Everywhere round-about there are only democrats, soon only republicans. I need mention no names. * * * Yesterday, bloody with will to victory in every trousers' pocket; today, Knight of the Spirit, uplifting "mutilated civilization" to pure glory! Neighbor, quick! Give me your smelling-bottle or I vomit!

Germans, you shall not, as yesterday you did for Princes, Excellencies, bank Presidents, Ministerial directors, today fawn upon the favor of Workers' and Soldiers' Councils. You shall be decent fellows, letting your action be determined by your honest convictions, and devil a care whether you please any one or not. * * *

A democratic party raises its broad banner. I will not now examine whether behind it, indeed, in front of it, there are not also marching many who, after evil deeds, would have good reason to keep themselves in a dark silence. The principles of the new party are highly praiseworthy, and I wish it a speedy victory; but I wish sincerely also that it may not become a refugium peccatorum for detected sinners whose souls are lusting for new maidenhood. In that case the advertising tricks of a Barnum will not help permanently to cast splendor over it. * * *

Democracy? As much as you wish. A Republic? With delight. The smashing of all feudal powers? Settled. Crown and scepter, Reichstag and House of Lords? Dust and ashes. Only, please, please do not reach out for our money! Be as impetuous as you please as democrats, but in socialization be nice and tame. We see splendid decorations, pompous curtains of words; and then hear: "The root of the economic system shall remain untouched!" or words to that effect. But the root will not be "untouched." Assuredly not. Those who touch it will even grasp it right roughly. At least two generations will suffer under it. Shall we today sorrow for it with chattering teeth? I, too, have acquired my little money very laboriously, have never inherited anything or gathered it in without labor. It matters not; away with it, if from such sacrifice salvation springs for the poor.

Do you really believe that it would have been better if Wilhelm had marched victorious under the Brandenburg Gate? That then the public order and the root of the economic system would have remained untouched? Unthinkable. Where in the world were the two hundred billions to have come from, or even the eight or ten billions which we would have needed each year to pay the interest on our debt? Surely not out of the paper hurdy-gurdy that for four years has been revolving before our eyes and which the organ-grinder has been trying to encourage to livelier movement with the song of the Victor's Laurel Wreath? Besides, all that paper is worthless. Only the labor of your sons and grandsons will and can create a new value for it—when Germany prospers again and its chimneys smoke. Today these bits of paper are merely notes on a treasure of the future.

A FUNERAL GROUP AFTER BERLIN RIOTING.

In the procession that followed the coffins of victims in street fighting were a few British and French prisoners of war. On this particular day a hundred bodies were buried in one grave.

If to the new parties there attaches even the faintest smell of anxiety about the dear pocketbook, then they will not win the slightest bit for the bourgeoisie among the workers. With compromises nothing more can be effected after the war and the revolution; indeed, nothing dare be effected by them. The bourgeois, in Byzantine or stulted tolerance, because he earned rich income, has sinned. He and his class must atone for it. That is fate. Who was it that gathered up his forces for the revolution? A few spiritual leaders revolutionized the spirits, and without this sowers' and plowers' work there would have been no harvest. Without Voltaire and Rousseau there would have been no Robespierre and Danton. But as a class it was the workingmen, the proletarians who had been driven and hounded into the most horrible misery of war, who did the trick. It was they who risked their lives and freedom, first out there at the front and then at home, in this terrible game. * * *

Can communism be established tomorrow in the wide realm of German economics? I doubt it. I do not believe that the body of our economic system, wounded unto death, can do without the experience, the arts, the plans, even the tricks of capitalism, without suffering danger. * * * First restore health, and then bring self-education in duty, form or freedom. But, most important of all, we are really not yet free. We have been abandoned by the deposed tenants of imperial power and their confidential agents in such a sad state of unfreedom as scarcely ever has any people in history, and in such a manner as only a cannibalistic conscience could without dizziness leave those who have rendered such services and such faithful sacrifice.

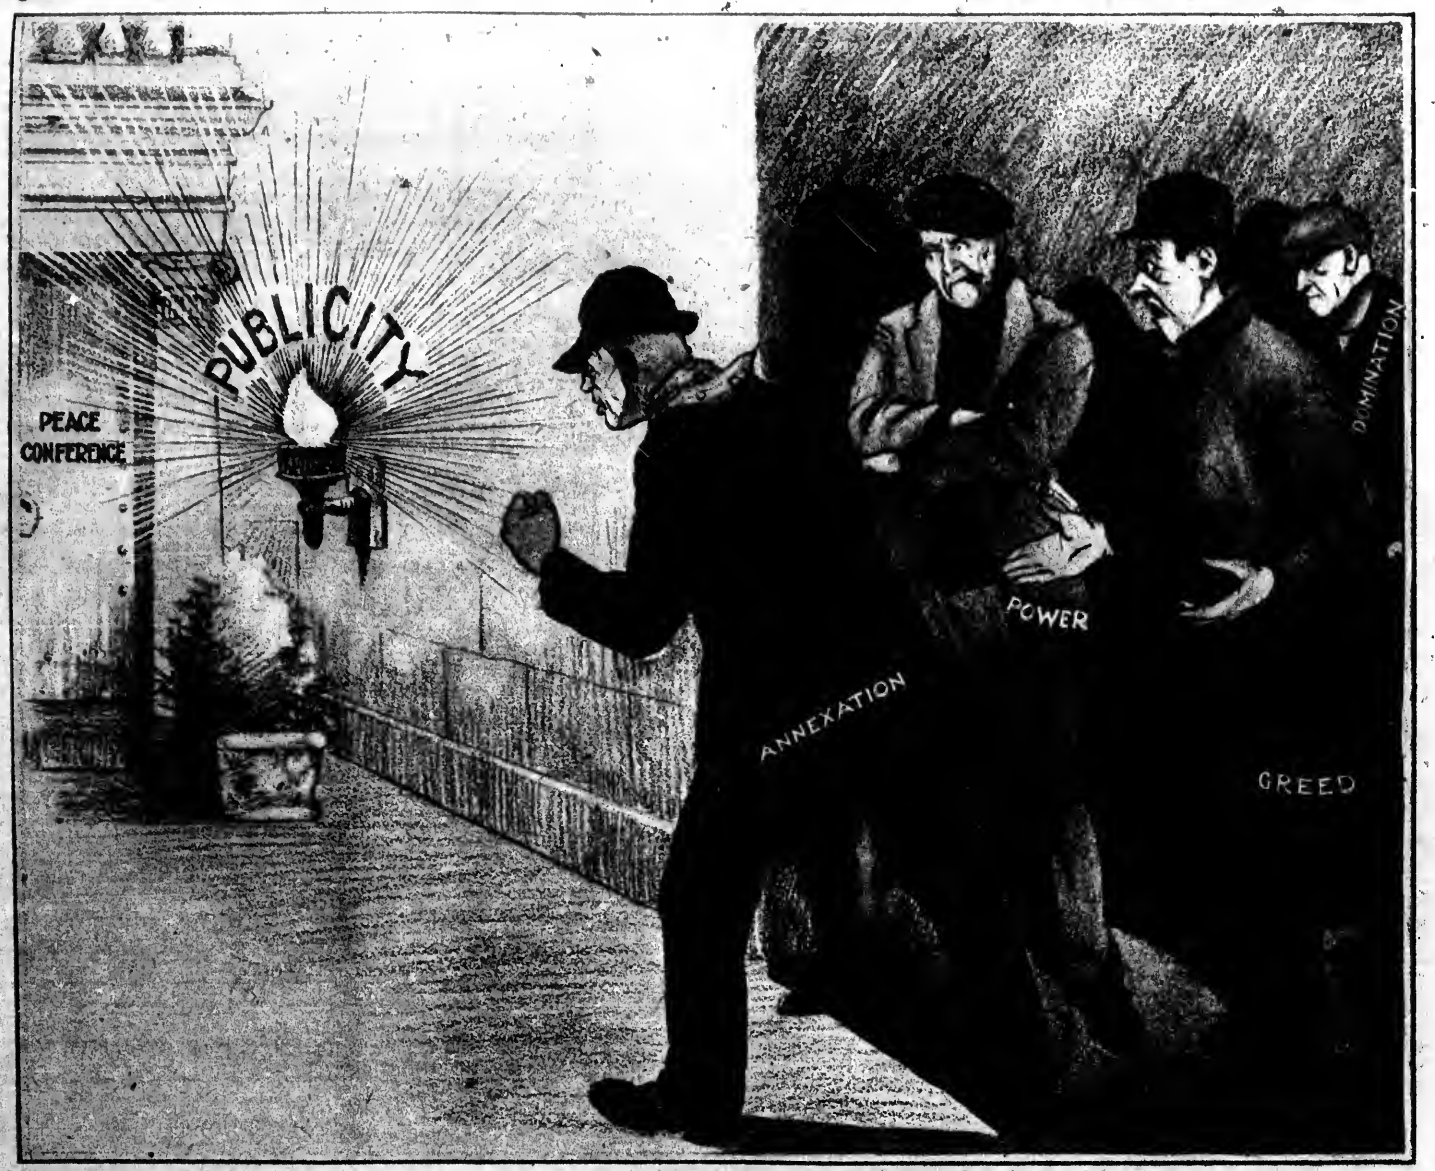
We are forced to reckon with the will of Western Europe and of America. And even if Pan Germany fervently and unitedly yearned for communism, "socialization of all property," expropriation of all rights of property, the fulfillment of that yearning would nevertheless be denied. The world of those Powers which we need would compel us to forego a communistic economic system. In Russia, too, we have just seen an attempt at communism. I have recently said that Bolshevism is most emphatically not, as superficial observers think, a system invented by murderers and robbers, but an idealistic structure of great style; and already there are becoming visible around it, side by side with vast devastated areas, useful plants of a quite new variety.

But when we use the word Bolshevism in daily conversation it has a different meaning, and we use it as current coin. In that sense all take it to mean the State procedure of breaking all acquired rights through tyrannical force and threats of life and property. Our inner eye then sees a picture of a soldateska raging in our own land, shooting, butchering, plundering, taking booty as for years they were wont to do in enemy country; as they were accustomed to do through people who were so short-sighted that they did not believe in the possibility of importing the dangerous custom. Such Bolshevism is not desired by the proletariat of Germany, which is sound to the core, nor by its uniformed sons and brothers. And if they did desire it, and tried to make it grow on this soil, then, after the greatest success, which could throw back German Kultur and civilization a century, we would come under foreign rule. The enemies into whose hands we have been delivered helpless, in spite of the fact that some 10,000,000 German men are still under arms, through frivolous frittering away of the possibility of peace, in blind and deaf dreaming of triumph—these enemies would advance into the very heart of Germany and restore order in their own way. * * *

We have internationalists at the head of the empire. Let them call to humanity and say:

"Here, under Groener and Mackensen, are almost 10,000,000 harried and confused men, whose bodies and souls hunger for food, and who, if they are crowded into trains in haste, hungry, thirsty, uncleaned, uninstructed about what has happened in Germany, and with sentiments grown wild, will be fit after three days to be tools for every terroristic attempt, every impulse for a counter-revolution. If we do not succeed in convincing these men that tomorrow each individual one of them will be respected as a human being, a creature valuable in himself and for others, if we do not succeed in bringing them quietly home, each with his little parcel of happiness—then, indeed, may the Continent, old Europe, tremble! Not only for fear of sickness, either. Then what you call Bolshevism will be inevitable and cannot be stayed. Only out of international community can salvation spring forth on this field.

"If you seriously desire the league of free peoples (free from hatred, too,) then you must not delay doing for these 10,000,000 human beings what human love and human dignity demand. And the same demand must be emphasized by your own self-interest. Not for us are you saving these human beings (bad as is our lot; we do not whine for alms). You are saving them for all of you. For you are lost with the rest, if there comes into being here a chaos reeking with blood."



"If we only could put out that light, we could sneak in!"

American Soldiers on Leave in France

IT was one of the good little old cities of France, just like many another little county seat, with a main street which was either dusty or muddy according to the season, a church of the sixteenth century, calm and peaceful, and the remains of a feudal castle.

Life was easy-going and rather dull. The people hardly ever worked; their chief occupation was gossipping about their neighbors. The commercial travelers who carried the atmosphere of Paris in their sample-cases found that the place had gone stale and wasted no time in it. In the evening in the deserted cafés a few casino players drowsed under the sleepy eye of the cashier.

The war had increased the somnolence of the little city. Saddened by mourning, embittered by the restrictions, worried, suspicious, it had become altogether inhospitable.

But, one fine morning, on the market place, in the cafés, a great piece of news had been passed about. The Americans, who were beginning to arrive in France in large numbers, were leasing for long terms or buying outright several farms, fields, and woods in the country round about.

At first the whole city arched its back against the invading stranger. "What have those people come to do now in our country?"

The first battalions of engineers who detrained at the railroad station with their equipment were not at all affably received. Soon, a few kilometers from the city, barracks were going up with astonishing rapidity. Then they were putting up a telephone line and laying a railroad to connect the camp with the station. In six months a city of boards, with more inhabitants than the county seat itself, was decorating the plain where formerly a few shepherds had wandered behind their flocks.

All at once our little city, taken by surprise, then filled with enthusiasm, began to exaggerate "Americanism."

In place of the dusty streets in which nondescript little dry goods stores were barely getting along, there appeared tea rooms, Teddy rooms, American bars, Liberty bars, standard bars, &c. Restaurants were opened in which the cooking was exclusively American, at least it was thought to be exclusively American. For a few weeks they coined money in the little city. As it was well known that all Americans are millionaires at least, our good business people asked "American" prices, which the Yankees paid at first without a murmur.

And then, little by little, they learned that two fried eggs are not worth anywhere near 4 francs (80 cents) even in wartimes. Practical people that they are, quick to decide, instead of wasting time and breath in vain protesting, they simply quarantined the Teddy rooms, tea rooms, Liberty rooms, &c., not to mention a few shoe stores and other shops. Made wise by the sombre prospect of failure, the business people are now content with more honest, though still very handsome profits, and things are going along better in this happiest of county seats.

In the afternoon the little city still has the sleepy look of former days. It is in the evening about 7 o'clock that it wakes up when the train arrives with the men who are on leave.

In camp, work ends at 6 o'clock. The bugle, in the form of a megaphone mounted on a tripod, sounds for dinner, which the men eat hastily in their barracks. Then they immediately wash, shave, and board the train.

In the city many pass the evening in the cafés, where they consume a great deal, saving not being an American virtue. But there is no drunkenness, no disorder. Besides, the American police is right at hand. A few great big strapping fellows, with an arm-band marked with the initials M. P., (military police,) patrol the city. Fastened to their belt they carry a sort of short club, which would make a formidable weapon but which remains a symbol of the power which they very rarely use.

But cafés and bars are not the sole haunts of our young Americans.

Love has also gone to war. The little city is filled with pretty girls who find that the khaki uniform sets off extremely well the young vigor of the American soldier. Some of these girls are absolutely devoid of restraining virtue; but those are not the ones the boys prefer. Commerce and love appear to them hardly compatible. For most of these young men have a good deal of sentiment in their make-up and often show a purity of morals that would make us Frenchmen smile. They wish to love, and generally with the idea of marrying. Then they pay their court quietly and earnestly, with no brusqueness, and it is a charming sight to see these big boys, foreigners, in the French family of their fiancée. There is not much talking because they hardly understand each other, but they get on all the same. Jimmy stammers a few words of French, Henriette speaks very brokenly a few of English. That is enough for them to express the inexpressible.

Another of the attractions of the man on leave is the visit to the protégés, children of the devastated regions or war orphans adopted by the American soldiers. They call the children their mascots and are sure that they bring them good luck.

Supported at the expense of the regiment by a fund which reaches a very respectable figure, the children are kept in the little city with their nurses and our brave fellows take great joy in giving them clothing, candy, and toys. The other day it took a whole lot of talking to convince the privates of the —— aero squadron that a bicycle was not quite the thing for their ward who was only 4 years old. Didn't they want to take her back to camp with them and her old nurse, too!

They found consolation for not having her all to themselves in making all sorts of plans for her bringing up, her education, and her marriage in America "when things are over."

he went on. "Dancing teaches the men far more than they know. In the first place, they master agility in movement. And with it they gain self-confidence that will be of great help to them in walking. And in dancing with girls they acquire further confidence—the confidence that comes from doing a normal thing successfully, associating and competing with 'sighted' people. We have these dances every week or two, and the men laugh and flirt and have a good time, like any healthy, normal boys.

"There is another thing that is brought out in the dances," the Educational Director continued, in answer to a question about the men's personal attitude—were they or were they not shy?—toward their "sighted" guests. "Our men are never awkward or self-conscious in meeting and mingling with people who can see—even young girls at a dance—because we never admit the idea of such a thing. We never under any circumstances say to one of our patients, 'Don't be shy!' or 'Don't be nervous!' That would be a dreadful thing to suggest! Instead, we tell them what to do, and we say, 'Fine! Go ahead.'"

As soon as it is known that a man is permanently blinded, he is told about it—not pityingly or with an air of gentleness, but with the straight-out-from the-shoulder call to courage that experience has proved to be the kindest way. He is not told that he is "afflicted" and that he must be "patient," and learn "resignation"—he is challenged to the precise opposite of all that, to fight to overcome a handicap, to prepare to compete for the rest of his life with men of the seeing world, and to beat them at their own game. Everything in the present curriculum at Evergreen is designed to help a man win the battle for his livelihood. And when, as he lies helpless in bed on his first arrival, he is given puzzles to amuse himself with, he does not know that even they are already a part of his mental and physical preparation to meet the challenge of that battle; in mastering the little puzzles his fingers will gain their first dexterity, and in conquering his earliest obstacle he will have gained his first victory over helplessness.

Said Major Ardan, in briefly outlining the plan of the hospital's work:

"Practically all the blinded patients who come to us are primarily shell-shock cases. 'Shell shock' is itself a misnomer, however—it merely means that there is something—we don't know just what—the matter with the man's nervous condition; there are various psycho-neuroses and somo-psychoses that are undiagnosed; and there is no sense in treating the symptoms. We have to find out just what the matter is, and then treat the patient first and the disease second. That is one of the first points of our treatment here—always the individual patient. With the end of individual treatment in view we have developed a curriculum of four two-month periods. And when a man is brought to us he is first examined by a medical man, an eye man, and a psychologist, so that the exact facts of his physical and mental state are made plain, and then, after a consultation of these three with the educational department, a detailed statement is made of his work and play for the first period—precisely how much he is to have of each. Some get over their 'shell shock' in a week; with some it takes three months.

"It is in the first two weeks that the men feel helpless. By the end of that time they are beginning to learn to do things for themselves, and you'd be surprised to see what a difference two weeks make. Of course the personal equation comes in here, and with some men it takes longer than others. A man begins to pull up mentally as soon as he begins to feel some result in what he is doing, to realize that he is beginning to accomplish something. That generally takes about two weeks, and it is in that time that we impress it upon the men that this is a handicap to be overcome, and a challenge to their courage.

"To go back to the first two-month period—and I must explain," Major Ardan interpolated, "that the phrase 'two-month period' is simply one of classification; it usually takes two months to get through this period, but it may take six months or only a few weeks; it is always the individual need that is met. Well, in that first period there is the most of entertainment and the least of work. There are all sorts of amusements for the men. They have reading classes, minstrel shows, concerts, they learn to dance, they have games in the gymnasium, swimming, bowling, various kinds of physical exercise. An effort is made at the same time to interest them in school work. And they have so much of the fundamental training in braille, typewriting, and digital dexterity (basketry, weaving, &c.) as does not interfere with their physical and mental recuperation. During that period they are allowed to have all the 'time off' from evening study that they want.

"In that first period there are certain definite things that are done in the training of the men's minds to their new kind of life. First, every effort is made to teach them to forget what they have been through at the front.

"Second, it is made plain to them that by being blinded they have not become subnormal, but are merely handicapped. And, third, they are told that that handicap will be overcome for them by the training they receive here. It is said," Major Ardan added, "that a blind man has lost 30 per cent. of his normal ability; our work here is to give back that 30 per cent. by extra efficiency of body and mind.

"Fourth," he continued, "the patient's courage and interest are stimulated by allowing him to find out for himself that every day he is learning to do things that he had thought as a blind man he would be totally unable to do.

"That is a short outline of the first period's scheme as it touches our direct relations with the patient here. But there is another very important part of it in getting ready for the man's future—the part that has to do with his family.

"As soon as a patient is sent here his family is wired to. Then when the complete diagnosis of his condition has been made his photograph is taken—as soon as he is well enough—and that, with a general description of his state, is sent home. This does away with the danger of his family's exaggerating his disfigurement and bad condition and at the same time tells them exactly what to expect when they see him. Then each family gets a report once or twice a month. That is not the only way in which we seek the co-operation of the family, but it covers the first period; and, you see, with the family kept closely informed in this way, there is no shock of readjustment either for them or for the boy himself.

"When the boys get here the first thing they want is a furlough. They want to go home. If they are not allowed to, they are unhappy, and an unhappy patient is not susceptible to treatment. So we let them all go who want to, sending an attendant with each man, who takes him all the way home and brings him all the way back. They usually spend about ten days at home, and they come back happy and satisfied. Of course, the family has received full information before the boy gets home. And it is scarcely necessary to point out that a great deal depends on family co-operation.

"In the second two-month period the patients are given more advanced training in various vocational branches; they are not yet ready to choose what they want to do, but they get a taste at this time of different things—bookbinding, carpentry, weaving, netting, &c. And the point of our training is that we teach a man all about the game as it is played by 'sighted' men outside; he doesn't only learn to bind books, he learns all about the business of bookbinding.

"The third is the period of specialization. By that time a man is supposed to know his own mind. He is a normal citizen, and is treated as such. He is ready to clinch the thing as his life's work, and he goes at it with all the sagacity of the normal man who means to succeed.

"In the fourth period the specialization goes on, with this added feature: Each man's mother, or wife, or sister, or sweetheart—the person with whom he will be living in the future at home—is brought here to the hospital, (there is a Red Cross House in Baltimore where the women will live,) and is taught how to co-operate with the hospital and with him. She learns the blind man's point of view, how to be sympathetic and helpful without spoiling things by being sentimental, and she is taught how to enter completely into his new personal life. She is also taught how to help him in the work that he has chosen. That phase of the training is only just beginning, for this is still a new hospital."

The development of Evergreen has been from the first under the direction of Lieut. Col. James Bordley, Director of the Red Cross Institute for the Blind, who is responsible, more than any one else, for the success and inspiration of the work. Lieut. Col. Bordley, who is the officer of the Division of Physical Reconstruction in charge of the re-education of blinded soldiers, sailors, and marines in the office of the Surgeon General of the United States Army, has been at the head of the work at Evergreen since the Surgeon General's office began its plans eighteen months ago.

There are 123 men at Evergreen now—two marines, two sailors, two civilians who lost their sight doing war work, the rest soldiers. Nine have become blind from injury or disease, the others have lost their sight in foreign service. Of the entire number, fifty-five are totally blind. Major Ardan expects a total of about 250 patients at the hospital, and five new buildings are now being put up.

Teaching the People How to Keep Well

Public Health Nurses, First Suggested by Florence Nightingale, Now Held Essential to Any Program for Conservation of the Nation's Well-Being

MISS ELLA PHILLIPS CRANDALL, who during the war was engaged in directing the work of the nursing committees of the Council of National Defense, has just returned to New York to take up her duties with the National Organization for Public Health Nursing, of which she is Executive Secretary. According to Miss Crandall, one of the most vital problems to be met now by the nation is the proper care and conservation of health. She says further that public health nursing is an essential part of any complete health program.

"Before going into the details of the question, let me explain what I mean by public health nursing," she said; "or, rather, let me define the phrase 'the public health nurse.' We are all familiar with the visiting nurse, who comes in response to an immediate need for nursing care; the infant welfare nurse, whose work is confined to the care of the very young; the social service nurse, who is especially interested in the social well-being of an individual or group, and the school nurse, who is employed to work among the school children of a community. The public health nurse is all of these, or any one of them. She is a composite of them, if you will, bearing the qualities of all. She may limit her work to any one of these activities or combine them all as a general community nurse.

"The duty of the public health nurse is not primarily to bring the patient to a state of health after he has become sick, but to teach him how to keep well and prevent illness. Her ultimate aim is the health of the community rather than that of the individual. The theory upon which public health nursing is based is that care of the individual is doubly important because his illness affects the health standard of the family, that the health of the family is important because of its relation to the community group, and the health of the community is important because of the bearing it has on the prosperity and happiness of the State and the nation.

"The modern public health aspect of this work found its inception in the mind of Florence Nightingale, although she is usually thought of as the founder of nursing education which is intimately related to care of the sick in hospitals. But what she was pleased to call 'health missioners' in her day were virtually the same as the public health nurses of today. The development of this phase of public health work has been sporadic for the last twenty years. But during the last six or seven it has begun to make itself an important factor in the country. At the time the war started we had six thousand public health nurses in the country directed by some twenty-five hundred agencies interested in this work. By agencies I mean departments of health and of education, industrial and commercial companies, hospital social service organizations and visiting nurse associations and other agencies devoted to special health interests.

"When the call for military nurses came, a good many of these women, impelled by a desire for patriotic service, left their posts in this country and went abroad for hospital duty. The impulse was fine and worthy of praise. It was difficult for these women to appreciate, as it has been difficult for people in other home service duties to appreciate, that every woman as well as every man was obligated to give to the Government her maximum service even when this meant, as it often did, 'carrying on' right at home rather than overseas; and that the maintenance of the home defense was as important a factor in the success of the war as the maintenance of the armies in the trenches.

Miss Ella Phillips Crandall.

"The call for war service at home came to the depleted ranks of public health nurses soon after the army cantonments were established. It was the first time in the history of the country that the Federal Government had taken cognizance of this branch of public health nursing. This work was organized and supervised by Mary E. Lent, Associate Secretary of this organization, who was loaned to the Government upon nomination of the Red Cross. Her staff of nurses were sent out to the districts surrounding the military camps known as extra-cantonment zones, and there carried on a campaign of health protection invaluable in the judgment of the Surgeon General of the United States Public Health Service and the commanding officers of the zones under whom they worked. Education along the lines of control of communicable diseases was the principal feature of the work. The first draft had shown that of the so-called flower of our manhood, 30 per cent. were suffering from serious physical defects and disease, including a surprising amount of incipient tuberculosis.

"The statistics of venereal disease were equally startling. To bring home these facts with the aim of teaching people how to remedy and to prevent them became the program of the Government. What this means can best be appreciated when one takes into consideration that the war brought on a state of housing and working conditions where the communication of disease was something to be daily reckoned with. In the camps the men were housed together in barracks. In the cities industrial workers were located in hastily constructed shops, factories, and shacks. They were concentrated in the effort to give a high degree of service and to maintain a steady output. That, especially in shops and factories, meant overcrowding to a degree which under normal conditions would not have been tolerated.

"Public health work began to be considered as a straight business proposition, as every case of illness or accident diminished the quantity and regularity of output. More and more, people awoke to the fact that health service rendered to the army at home was equally as important as that for the army afield. It may be an interesting fact that, according to the statistics taken by the Canadian Government during 1917, the percentage of accidents and tuberculosis in the industries of that country was greater than the percentage of casualties of the men at the front.

"Added to all this there came the demand from abroad for public health nurses to help in community rehabilitation work in France, Belgium, Rumania, and later in Italy. The nurses went, of course, because this was the kind of work for which their special training had equipped them. This depleted to a still greater extent the ranks of public health nurses at home. Then came the epidemic of influenza which taxed beyond capacity all organized bodies of trained workers and called forth heroic volunteer service from citizens, both men and women, everywhere. It is probably not too much to say that in all large cities and practically wherever public health nurses were located, the nursing outside of hospitals was directed by their organizations, which quickly coordinated all separate agencies under common leadership and expanded their service to include day and night duty and the work of volunteers.

"As a result of this nation-wide tragedy, which resulted in more deaths than the total due to war, the people learned to appreciate and understand this type of service and its potential value as never before. Appreciation of public health nursing as part of the health program of a community was greatly strengthened. It is no longer a matter of theory. Its practical value has been demonstrated before the eyes of the nation.

"Now with the closing of the war, and the passing of the epidemic, the need of proper health conservation must not be lost sight of, nor the public health nurse's part in it. The question now is —where are these nurses, so much in demand in all parts of the country, to come from? We had only six thousand at the beginning of the war. A good many of these are still in Europe. Those who are returning are being snatched up just as soon as they appear. The answer then must necessarily be—increase the supply. This can be quickly done by attracting to this field, as they return, a good many of the private duty nurses who have been in Government service. The impulse that moved them to go overseas was patriotism. If we could get from two to four thousand of these fine young women to regard public health nursing as just as truly a national service and to enlist under its banner, the immediate problem could be on the road to solution.

"The vast majority of these women are, however, not trained to take up this work immediately. What the National Organization for Public Health Nursing proposes to do is to raise a sufficient sum of money to be used as a scholarship fund for the nurses who desire to go into this service. It is understood that many of them, coming back from military duty, (in which their salaries were much less than their usual income,) will not be able financially to avail themselves of this term of training. Post-graduate courses are four and eight months in length, the four months' course equipping a nurse for a staff position under supervision, and the eight months' course equipping her for executive and supervisory work, providing she has the necessary qualities of leadership. The great need throughout the country to day is for women of the latter type; women who, knowing the health problems of a community, can so organize and direct a corp of workers as to make possible at least a minimum of nursing care for the people.

"That the subject is sufficiently important to be of national interest is proved by the introduction of the first reconstruction bill before Congress by the United States Public Health Service calling for a fund of $1,500,000 to be used for public health work, including community nursing. The bill provides that those States undertaking a health program which shall include child welfare, industrial welfare, and rural health work are to be given a Federal subsidy on condition that the States appropriate an equal sum from their own treasury. The public health officials aim at having at least one public health nurse in each county. Even before this, the Federal Children's Bureau introduced a bill (which will have a hearing before the Senate Committee this month) providing a similar subsidy for the States, in a program directed toward the better care of mothers and infants.

"If we could get 1,000 women to take post-graduate courses of training during the next six months, it is practically certain that they could easily be absorbed in this national work. I say 1,000 because there is a definite limit to the numbers who could be given even the most limited practical training under proper supervision within that period."

Korea Appeals to Wilson for Freedom

"Hermit Kingdom," Now Under Japanese Control, Looks to the Versailles Peace Conference for Aid---How Koreans See Their Country's Situation

By E. S. BISBEE.

PRESIDENT WILSON in Paris has received a cablegram of appeal for a consideration of Korea's claims to autonomy from a committee representing Korea, in which at least one name was familiar to the former President of Princeton University. This name was that of Syngman Rhee, Ph. D., who received that degree from "Old Nassau" while Mr. Wilson was its President. Dr. Rhee is now editor of the Korean National Herald at Honolulu. The other signers were Chan Ho Min, A. M., B. D., of Los Angeles, Cal., and Henry Chung, of the Korean National Association.

The appeal related that the desire of the people was freedom from domination by Japan and the preservation of nationalism, in order to keep alive the soul of Korea.

Korea, the Hermit of the Orient, is today crying for recognition by the Peace Conference and for the right to that self-determination by small and subject nationalities which was made one of the most conspicuous of the Fourteen Points of President Wilson.

Kung Pok Palace, Seoul.

For fourteen years dominated by Japan under the easy phrase of "benevolent assimilation," unhappy Korea has humbly submitted to a yoke which her pride of blood and her knowledge of achievement made galling. With a population of fifteen millions of people, all of whom were churchmen, agriculturists, or scholars, she never had an army. Of the great nations of the Orient, China has ever been the merchant, sending her goods into adjacent lands and at the same time slowly through the centuries spreading a natural propaganda of commercial efficiency; Japan has been the warrior nation, as specially exemplified by the Samurai, while Korea was essentially a land of scholars.

Main Street, Showing the North Palace, in Seoul, Capital of Korea.

The Korean sees, in Japanese domination of his people and their lands, a growing menace toward a similar sovereignty over a large portion of China. With a population of sixty millions, which is growing at the rate of eight hundred thousand a year, Japan's natural borders are too confined for her development and the necessities of this rapidly augmenting multitude of human beings.

The Japanese, a race of high natural mentality, rapidly assimilated Occidental ideas, and Japan's leading men saw at once that the "Island Kingdom" had a future "in the sun." Thus she rapidly advanced toward the plane along which Occidental peoples were progressing, changing her manners and many of her century-old customs with the bewildering rapidity of the chameleon's change of hue.

With the Russo-Japanese war came a new era for Japan. Her population had grown tremendously and was advancing in greater volume every year. It was essential that she enlarge her sphere of activity or there would soon come a time when the human congestion would be such that the problem of life would be insoluble. It became, with the Empire of the Mikado, not so much a question of territorial expansion for the mere sake of colonization as a case of dire necessity for the inhabitants of the islands, who were actually crowding themselves out of house and home and becoming a menace to their own lives. There was not room enough for the millions who lived there, and their Government was morally called upon to provide for them. This necessity was, in reality, the fundamental cause of the war with Russia, for Japan could not stand idly by and see the powerful neighbor on her west reach forth and take unto herself lands that meant the very life of Japan's teeming millions.

The result of that war was to give to Japan the immensely valuable Korean Peninsula, for Korea, in order to save herself from Russian aggression, had formed an alliance with Japan for mutual protection. In return for this alliance Japan guaranteed to Korea her independence and territorial rights, but, following the winning of the war by Japan, the Korean Peninsula was formally annexed to the empire of the Mikado, after a protectorate had first been established, the Emperor Li was dethroned and became a ward of Japan and the real menace to China was born.

The Korean dynasty of Li ended Aug. 29, 1910, the Emperor receiving from the Japanese Government an annuity of $250,000 for himself and family, and being permitted to live in the ancient palace at Seoul, an emperor no longer, but merely a ward of the conquering power and a virtual prisoner, for he since has been guarded by soldiers and neither entrance nor exit is permitted save by permission from the Japanese Governor General.

Throughout Korea the Japanese have built magnificent roads and modern railroads. They have erected, at an expense of millions of yen, mansions for their higher dignitaries and splendid houses for their Government employes, all of these improvements having been made at the expense of the Korean taxpayer. All of which is not particularly gratifying to the Korean.

From Korea direct roads run into the rich lands of Manchuria and from Manchuria into China run many others. In the natural course of events, argues the Korean political student, Korea herself will have become too small to maintain the rapidly increasing population of Japan and a natural diversion of the increment will send it northward into Manchuria and thence southward into China. This is the end toward which he points the warning finger—that Japan is forced by nature to defend herself from annihilation by extending her boundaries along the course of least resistance, and this course runs through Manchuria into China, with its boundless area and unlimited opportunities. For co-operation and leadership Korea, at the time of the alliance with Japan, looked to her powerful and warlike neighbor, but in this the ancient "Hermit Kingdom" regards herself as having been sadly disappointed, for, according to the leaders of thought there, Japan has been guilty of a greater aggression and oppression than Prussia ever put upon Alsace-Lorraine.

Many articles have been circulated by Korean patriots in proof of this and treaties themselves point to the obligations resting upon other Governments. In the treaty between the United States and Korea, executed in 1882, Article I. reads:

> If other powers deal unjustly with either Government the other will exert their good offices, on being informed of the case, to bring about an amicable arrangement, thus showing their friendly feelings.

Regardless of this formal understanding with Korea, the United States at least once failed, according to the Korean conception of the meaning of that clause in the Treaty of 1882, to meet its requirements. This was in 1905, when, during the sessions of the Russo-Japanese Peace Conference at Portsmouth, N. H., the Koreans of Hawaii sent two delegates to Washington to call upon President Roosevelt, requesting him to "see to it that Korea may preserve her autonomous government and that other powers may not oppress or maltreat our people. The clause in the treaty between the United States and Korea gives us a claim upon the United States for assistance, and this is the time when we need it most."

These delegates were received courteously, but made no lasting impression upon the fixed policy of the United States toward Japan, and nothing came of that appeal.

Koreans feel that Japan should assume, as a national heritage and because of her great strides in world affairs, not the rôle of a conqueror who menaces his weaker and more pacific neighbors, but that of Asiatic leadership —not Asia for Japan but Asia for Asiatics. In this scheme Korea desires a national, although, naturally, a minor part. She would devote her talents to agriculture, to literature, to religion, and to commerce.

In Korea are a half million Christians and many Christian missionaries, although the national faith follows the teachings of Confucius. The former independent empire had evolved a high system of self-government, and all positions under it were controlled by an effective system of civil service. All this has been lost, as has the opportunity to practice the Korean religion, for even the language of the country is being lost, Japan having decreed that the tongue of the Mikado must be the only official one in schools, and later on this system is to be extended to the Church. This will practically forbid the exercise of the Christian religion, for a great majority of Koreans cannot read or speak Japanese, and their church services always have been conducted in their native tongue.

As recently as 1912, Governor General Terauchi, who later became Premier of Japan, instituted what is known in the church annals of Korea as "The Persecution of the Church." Prominent churchmen, leaders in Korean thought and education, were charged with conspiracy and imprisoned and their activities ended. American missionaries were brought to trial, charged with being implicated in the conspiracy to assassinate the Governor General of Korea. Here, however, the Japanese overstepped themselves, for their charges against the Korean Church aroused much criticism in the west, and when they appreciated that a reaction was imminent, the persecution of Korean Christians stopped and limitation of the activities of the Church took its place.

At present there is pending a negotiation between the Japanese authorities and the American missionary body concerning the missionary schools in the Peninsula. The mission schools have been deprived of their former rights under the old administration and are denied the privileges that Christian mission schools enjoy in Japan proper. They are discriminated against by the Japanese authorities, on the ground that they serve as hiding places of Korean nationalism.

Under the pretext of unifying the educational system of Korea and bringing it up to a higher standard, the Japanese Government in Korea passed educational regulations which forbid religious services and the teaching of history or geography or the Korean language in any school in Korea. Furthermore, they provide that all Korean schools shall be under the strict supervision of Japanese educators and that the Korean children shall be taught to salute the Japanese flag and to worship the Japanese Emperor's tablet.

Korean students who go to Japan to complete their education are advised to attend trade or technical schools, but they are practically barred from higher institutions of learning. It is almost impossible for a Korean student to specialize in such subjects as law, history, or economics at the Imperial University in Tokio, and no Korean student is permitted to go to Europe or America to complete his education.

Korea feels that she suffers the yoke of a conquering nation equally with the small subject peoples of Europe, yet her plight is less known because of her geographical position and also because of her isolation, which gave her the title of "The Hermit Kingdom," and, most of all, because of the rigid censorship exercised at all times by Japan. Her farmers have lost their lands, as her priests and scholars have been deprived of following their vocations.

A company was organized by direction of the Japanese Government and is supported by an annual subsidy of $250,000 from the Imperial Treasury. Its purpose is to colonize Korea with Japanese who are unable to make a living in Japan proper. A Japanese emigrant receives free transportation to Korea and is provided with a home and a piece of land, together with implements and provisions. He contracts to repay the company in three or four years for this outlay for his benefit.

In order to carry out this project of colonization, the Japanese Government in Korea confiscated all public lands formerly under the control of local communities and all lands owned by Buddhist temples and cultivated by Buddhist priests. But even these were far from sufficient for the requirements of the scheme, so the colonization company sought to buy the lands of the Korean farmers. There are eighty thousand square miles of land in Korea, supporting a population of fifteen millions, mostly agriculturists, and these natives declined to part with their heritage.

Here was where the aid of the Japanese Government was besought and secured, and the manner in which the solution of the problem was obtained was peculiarly Oriental in its subtlety. In Korea all the financial machinery centres in the Bank of Chosen, controlled by the Government and located in Seoul, the capital. Through its branches this powerful financial institution, corresponding to the Bank of England or the Treasury of the United States or the Bank of France, perhaps, called in all the specie in the country, thus making, as far as a circulating medium was concerned, the land practically valueless. In order to pay taxes and to obtain the necessaries of life the Korean must have cash, and in order to get it he must sell his land. Land values fell rapidly, and in some instances land was purchased by the agents of the Bank of Chosen for one-fifth of its former valuation.

Japanese by the tens of thousands began to pour into Korea to settle the lands thus bought for them by the Bank of Chosen, the process being unending, until now more than one-fifth of the richest lands of Korea are in the hands of the Japanese immigrants who have been sent over through the operations of this scheme.

In commerce and industry the Japanese have a complete monopoly, for the Korean merchant cannot compete with the Japanese because of the preferential treatment received from his Government by the native of Nippon.

A Strange Sect in Saloniki

THE Man in the Street has probably never heard of the Donmeh, yet they are a very real and actual people.

The Donmeh are a sect of cryptographic Jews, descendants of the followers of the cabalistic, visionary, and mystic Shabbethai Zebi, living mostly in Saloniki, formerly belonging to the Turk, and now annexed by Greece. After the death of the would-be Messiah, in 1687, his followers in Saloniki, under the leadership of his alleged reincarnation, Jacob Zebi Querido, formed a community which, following the example set by the founder, outwardly espoused Mohammedanism. The Turkish name of the sect, "Donmeh," applied to them by the Mohammedans, signifies "apostates"; the members call themselves "Maaminim," (believers,) "Haberim," (associates,) or "Ba'ale Milhamah," (warriors.)

The religion of the Donmeh is a mixture of Judaism and Islam, with some traces of Christianity. Although in secret observing certain Jewish rites, they in no way make common cause with the Jews, whom they call infideis. They are assiduous in visiting the mosque and in fasting during Ramadhan, and at intervals they even send one of their number on the "hajj" (pilgrimage) to Mecca.

The Donmeh are divided into three socially separated groups, the Ismirlis, or direct followers of Shabbethai Zebi of Smyrna; the Ya'-Kubis, or followers of Jacob Querido, and the Kuniosis, or followers of Othman Baba, who lived in the eighteenth century. Formerly the members of these groups did not intermarry and celibacy was preferred. In recent times, however, the endeavor is to make mixed marriages.

They consider wedlock as sacred, and have a horror of divorce and polygamy. Women occupy with them a much higher position than ordinarily among Turks, but, in obedience to the custom of the country, they wear the "yashmak," (veil.) The men have two sets of names—a religious one, which they keep secret, and a secular one for purposes of commercial intercourse. Their rabbis, besides being well versed in Holy Scriptures, are proficient in the Kabalah, and understand Judaeo-Spanish, which they regard as a holy language. Neither the Ismirlis nor the Ya'-Kubis believe in the death of their respective saints, and they are always awaiting their return.

The number of Donmeh in Saloniki is estimated at from 5,000 to 15,000. They are all well-to-do, and are known for their honesty and charity, even toward those of other creeds. They are expert "Katibs," or writers, and have been employed as such in bazaars and in inferior Government positions. Some, for instance, the Turkish Minister of Finance, Djavid Bey, attained to great eminence.

Winged Warfare and the League of Nations

World Federation Necessary to Enforce Regulations for Air Fleets, Neutral and Belligerent, in Time of War—"Freedom of the Seas" Involved

By CHARLES WARREN,
Ex-Assistant U. S. Attorney General.

IN most of the discussions as to the necessity of a League of Peace or a League of Nations, such a league has been advocated, or attacked, by arguments based on conditions of warfare and on relations of nations as they have existed in the past or as they now exist. One may, however, grant the proposition that a League of Nations may not be necessary to deal with a world constituted as it was in 1914 and warring with the weapons of 1914; and at the same time one may consistently urge the absolute necessity of a League of Nations to cope with the international conditions of the future. Wise regulation of the future, and not merely present, conditions is the proper aim of all law making and of all efforts toward social and political adjustment.

If, in August, 1914, the international law of the sea had been framed (and military and naval measures had been planned) with a view to meet and deal with the newly appearing war weapon — the submarine — how different might the history of the last four years have been!

Now, however, the most urgent question before the nations is not What shall be the future law of the sea? but rather What laws and measures shall be framed to deal with still newer weapons now developing—the airplane, the aerial torpedo, the aerial discharge of gas bombs, the employment of wireless for detonation of enemy explosives and for other hostile purposes? These new weapons must inevitably produce a fundamental change in the methods and conditions of future warfare. Yet little attention has thus far been paid in public discussion to their possible effect upon the international problems now to be settled, and upon the future relations of the nations.

Owing to the peculiar nature of the science of international law, the minds of international jurists inevitably tend to become past-enwrapped rather than projective. The quality of progressive legal imagination, of legal vision, is often lacking.

In view of the fact that the most serious form of military and naval attack in the future is likely to come from the air, how futile is much of the present prolonged discussions as to the past meaning and future scope of old-time phrases like "freedom of the seas," "effective sea blockade," "right of search," "right of destruction of contraband-carrying ships," "duty of removal of passengers and crews," and the like?

Suppose that the nations shall agree to forbid attack by submarine on merchant ships; is such a rule to apply to attack by airplane? How can an airplane identify a merchant ship? How can it exercise the right of search? How can it provide for safety of passengers and crew? How is a sea blockade to be enforced against airplanes? What effect is the ease and speed with which air attacks can be launched to have on the rules as to initiation and declaration of war? What actual protection can neutral territory have against aerial passage?

How is the law as to the bombardment of cities to be framed with reference to air attacks? Is a city containing munition works, barracks, camps, &c., or surrounded by forts, to be immune from such attacks? If not, what are to be the restrictions on the scope of such attacks? If such a city is to be immune, what is to be its right to refuse to surrender on demand of the attacking air force? Are the laws as to sea transportation of contraband by neutrals to apply to neutral airplanes transporting contraband in the air over the land? What are the rights of enemy airplanes flying over the sea coast territorial waters of neutrals? These are only a few of the questions to be considered.

Formation Flight as Seen from One of the Airplanes in the Squadron—A New Photograph Which Is Regarded as the Best One in the Picture Records of the Department of Military Aeronautics at Washington.

To what extent is the value of the maintenance of a great fleet by a naval power likely to be modified by the increased danger of attack upon it from the air? How far should this increased danger modify the right of a naval power to insist on the necessity of framing doctrines of international law in the interests of naval belligerents and adverse to the interests of neutral nations? How far will the possession of an adequate air force by a weaker land power neutralize the advantage heretofore held by a stronger land power possessing large armies?

If possession of adequate air forces by all the nations shall tend to lessen the influence of navalism and militarism, and to neutralize the advantages now held by those nations having the largest armies and fleets, how will this condition affect the arguments against disarmament?

All these problems must be met and settled in the near future. Any treaty of peace, which shall be framed now, on the basis merely of the problems presented by land and sea warfare as hitherto known, will be a treaty which will have a very insecure tenure of life. For no adjustment of the relations of nations can now be made without taking into consideration the probable effect of future aerial possibilities upon questions of peace and war, of neutrality and belligerency, of national isolation and international co-operation.

No one will doubt that, either at the Peace Conference or in some subsequent international conference, aerial warfare must be specifically regulated and a code of law applicable to it must be framed. Equally, without doubt, the degree of its regulation may occasion differences of opinion. There are some who believe that the best way to lessen the chance of future wars is to abandon the totally illogical theory of trying to make war humane, and that the more horribly destructive of property and life war can be made, both among the military and civil population of a country, the less frequently will free peoples decide to engage in war. To this end unrestricted aerial warfare, in view of the comparative cheapness with which it may be employed to occasion speedy, far-reaching, and costly destruction, may unquestionably prove the greatest possible discouragement of war itself. But if the opposite theory is to prevail and aerial warfare is to be strictly regulated so as to reduce its capacity for causing destruction to life and property, then a most formidable question is presented, How are these restrictive regulations to be enforced?

Unfortunately, it has been clearly proved, during the past four years, that it is impossible, under present international conditions, to cause belligerents to adhere to the rules of international law as applied to sea craft of the old types, and to land forces, and even less possible as applied to submarines. During this war, belligerents on both sides (with the exception of the United States) have violated international law, in instances when they have believed that compliance with such law would endanger their own safety. Yet, how much more difficult will it be to compel adherence to any new code of international law which shall be framed to govern aircraft! For, owing to the ease with which the air weapon may be wielded, the lesser expenditure of money and men with which it can be provided, equipped, and used, the swiftness of its operation, its capacity for tremendous destruction, the terror of destruction which it can hold out over populous cities—the temptation to any nation to make unrestricted use of this great power, regardless of rules of law, will be tremendously enhanced. The advantages to be gained by an infraction of law in the employment of aircraft, gas, &c., might be ten thousand fold those which can now be gained by a violation of law relating to land or naval operations. And with the increase of advantages to be so gained, the impelling motives to disregard the law will be correspondingly more potent.

Suppose that in August, 1914, Germany had suddenly launched a fleet of 1,000 airplanes instead of an army of 1,000,000 men; what might have been the result to Paris, to the coast towns, to London? Suppose that France and Russia had possessed similar airplane forces, what might have been the result to the Rhine towns and Berlin? The attack could have been made in a few hours, instead of a few weeks. It could have been made on the English and French fleets, or upon the German fleet, as well as upon the land forces and the cities.

Is it not possible that the results of such initial attacks might have gone far toward settling the war before actual extensive movement of troops could be begun? Is it not possible that the speedy, tremendous destruction, the burning of cities, and the killing and gassing of civilians might give an initial impulse to one side or the other which no amount of subsequent victories on land or sea could repair?

While those nations which respect their honor will observe the sancity of treaties and of compacts which they have signed, it is practically certain, deplorable as the fact may be, that the enormous advantage to be gained from unlawful employment of aerial forces, the speed and degree of loss and destruction to be inflicted thereby upon an adversary, out of all proportion to the chance of loss on its own side, will lead a nation which ignores national honor to employ such a weapon to its fullest extent, regardless of restriction. It is folly to argue that any mere rule of international law or any treaty having a mere moral binding force will prevent such an outlaw nation from seizing the enhanced opportunity which the new form of warfare will present.

We are brought, therefore, to the inevitable conclusion that unless some method is devised of compelling a nation to comply with any future code of international law as to air craft, the framing of such a code will prove even more futile than The Hague treaties and the established doctrines of courts and jurists have proved to be in the past four years. And in view of the above mentioned tremendous temptations to violate such future aircraft law, it would seem that there will be but one possible factor which might deter a nation from yielding to such temptation—namely, the existence of a combined world force, a League of Nations who shall agree to array themselves at once against any nation so violating the international compact and to bring overwhelming retribution upon the offender.

Making a Million Better Memories

Through a Method That Can Be Learned in One Evening

The Wonder Work of David M. Roth

FOR men and women, and young people, of America there has been developed a method of overcoming that most treacherous enemy of success and advancement—a bad memory.

I had an amazing experience with the Roth Memory Course.

But frankly it didn't seem credible that Mr. Roth's message would travel so quickly and so far. Men I meet in many places talk about the improvement Mr. Roth's easy method has wrought in their ability to remember the things they need to recall every hour of the day.

Perhaps a million are reading about this new institution. Thousands are buying the course and mastering its simple principles. Thousands have testified in writing to the tremendous benefits the Roth Memory Course has brought to them.

Those two stories of mine which you have seen in the leading magazines and newspapers—first the account of how I improved my memory in one evening and later the record of how the Roth Course greatly increased my business in a few months, have kept the Independent Corporation working overtime to answer eager inquiries and to fill orders for the Roth Course.

The wonderful part of it all is that Mr. Roth's students discover in the first few hours they spend on his course—yes, in the first half hour—that they really possess a perfectly good memory—only they never discovered before how to use it.

DAVID M. ROTH

When Mr. Roth first determined to cultivate his memory, it was because he found it to be probably poorer than that of any man he knew. He could not remember a man's name twenty seconds. He forgot so many things that he was convinced he could never succeed until he learned to remember. Today there are over ten thousand people in the United States whom Mr. Roth has met at different times—most of them only once—many of whom he can name on sight.

Mr. Roth can and has hundreds of times at dinners and lectures asked fifty or sixty men he has met to tell him their names, businesses and telephone numbers and then after turning his back while they changed seats, has picked each one out by name, told him his telephone number and business connection. These are only a few of the scores of equally "impossible" things that Mr. Roth can do and yet a few years ago he couldn't remember a man's name twenty seconds.

This Roth System is not memory training. That is the old-fashioned way of remembering—the way that exhausted the mental faculties through the great effort required. This is memory improvement with a minimum effort. It is just knowing how.

The best proof of this is the experience of Major E. B. Craft, Assistant Chief Engineer of the Western Electric Company. A few months ago he secured the Roth Course and in the first evening he spent on the opening lesson he found that he had learned to call off a list of 100 words forward and back without a single mistake or a moment's hesitation.

Major Craft has just returned from an important mission overseas. On the ship coming back they gave an entertainment to which the passengers contributed. Major Craft appeared on the program to give an exhibition in memory feats.

The audience called off twenty-five words each of which was written on a blackboard opposite a number. When the list was complete, Major Craft called off the list forward and back, then gave the word opposite every number or the number of any word. He concluded his demonstration by calling off just as easily a long list of errands invented by the audience.

Memory in Business

Your experience in business is only as old as your memory. The measure of your ability is largely your power to remember at the right time.

If you can remember—clearly and accurately—the solution of every important problem since you first took hold of your work, you can make all of your experience count.

If, however, you have not a good memory and cannot recall facts and figures that you learned years ago, you cannot make your experience count to the fullest efficiency.

There is no asset in business more important than a good memory. One of America's greatest business leaders, whose memory is said to be easily worth a million dollars, knows more about his business than any other man in his field, because he has been able to remember every really important thing he has ever learned.

"Then," says Major Craft, "I told them how I did it and during the rest of the trip they were waiting for a turn at my well-thumbed Roth Memory Course."

"If you don't receive a few hundred orders for the Course from those on our ship I shall be greatly surprised.

"It was good fun to give that exhibition, but the main thing to me is what the Roth System is doing for me in business—every day. I have to remember in my work a tremendous number of technical facts and figures—and I meet a multitude of men. I rarely miss a name or face now, once I have it fixed in my memory by Mr. Roth's method. And as for facts and figures I never dreamed I could learn to remember them so accurately and permanently."

Here is part of a letter from George J. Lemmon, a leading attorney of Denver:

"To a man who has studied memory work as much as I have, and given it up as hopeless to get any definite system, and then found one so complete, pliable and practical as this Roth Course, it is simply useless to try to express my appreciation of it. Enclosed find check for the course."

Says E. M. C. McAlpine, President of the McAlpine Milking Machine Company:

"If I had a family of 500 boys—or girls—I would make them all take up this Roth Course and spend at least one hour a day at it. For I am convinced that it would develop in them prodigious memories—would give them each a million dollar memory. Advertise it everywhere, and compel people by the very pleasure it gives them to take up this amazing course in memory culture."

I could quote letters like the above and those in the panel below by the thousand but I haven't the space here and, after all, what is the use when to learn what the Roth Memory Course will do for you, all you have to do is to mail the coupon.

For that is the remarkable offer the publishers of the Roth Memory Course are making. Send no money—just the coupon and by return post they will send you the course. Keep it five days—then if you are not more than satisfied—if you don't agree with the tens of thousands of others who say that it's the greatest thing of the kind they ever saw, send it back and you will owe not a penny.

If, on the other hand, you are satisfied merely send $5 the small fee asked. Five dollars? Why the Roth Memory Course will be worth hundreds to you if it is worth a cent.

So you have nothing to lose and everything to gain. Mail the coupon now and join the million wide awake Americans who are increasing their incomes through this great and instantly available help.

Evidence

"I find this memory training to surpass anything yet published on this subject. The Roth Memory Course is almost too wonderful to be true, yet so simple that it cannot help be of great value to anyone."—Edgar T. Cook, Blacklick, Pa.

"The Roth Memory Course should be installed in the schools of our country and thereby improve the memories of our students, for memory is the foundation of a good education."—Dr. J. G. Butler, Roaring Spring, Pa.

"I have several other memory courses which have been hard work to study. This is so simple and fascinating that once started I don't want to stop. It bids fair to accomplish what the others have failed to do."—E. W. Buckingham, M. D., U. S. Naval Hospital, Norfolk, Va.

"The course is better than I expected, it is so simple that a child can understand. You do not do yourself justice when you say a person can improve their memory 100% in a week's time. You should have said any person can improve their memory 100% in two hours' time."—Charles A. Horan, Philadelphia, Pa.

WAR AND SATIRE IN "THE ROLL-CALL"

Arnold Bennett's Latest Novel a Pleasing Continuation of His Clayhanger Series—Story of the War by Samuel Hopkins Adams—Latest Fiction

THE ROLL-CALL. By Arnold Bennett. New York: George H. Doran Company. $1.60.

THIS novel relates the adventures of George Clayhanger, who manifests his independence of the Five Towns of his parents by quitting Bursley at the "unripe" age of seventeen and coming up to London, where he assumes the name of Cannon and apprentices in the office of Lucas & Enwright, architects. Perhaps it is Mr. Bennett's way of manifesting his independence also, as if he were afraid that "The Pretty Lady" had not sufficiently demonstrated it. The London he depicts in "The Roll-Call" is the London of the first years of the twentieth century. Mr. Bennett maliciously describes his hero demonstrating his ability to hang by his toes off a mantelshelf on "the very morning upon which, President McKinley having expired, Theodore Roosevelt ascended to the throne and inaugurated a new era." This is characteristic of the satirical mood of the present novel as it was of "The Pretty Lady." The author takes a sly delight in exposing young Clayhanger's puerilities, his timidities, his self-deception. "See," he seems to be saying to you, "this young man, whose notions about the world are so malformed, whose destiny is subject to the most fortuitous occasions, who is never of the same mind for two hours together about what he wants, who is capable of snobbery and the crassest money-worship—this young man may one day become a great architect and belong to academies and achieve an impenetrable carapace of respectability!"

Never has Mr. Bennett's satire been so effective, so richly humorous. He takes George about in the different strata of London society, his first sweetheart's father is the "factotum" at Lucas & Enwright's, her father marries a charwoman. And he places a "tea" with the factotum and the charwoman, next to a fashionable luncheon in a great house. The luncheon is described irresistibly: the infinitesimal talk, the inconsequential people, the house itself, meretricious as the imitation rafters of the ceiling. And after "the pale nightmare" of this luncheon George goes to his rooming-house to have tea with the factotum and the charwoman he had married. Mr. Bennett's genius for making visible the aureole which surrounds the commonplace is magnificently exemplified here. This charwoman is the most poetic person in the book. There is an infinity of romance in her; her husband's devotion is made completely understandable:

> His face was close to the blanched, blind face of Mrs. Haim. He thought she looked very young, astonishingly young in comparison with either Haim or Prince. Her complexion was damaged but not destroyed. Little fluffy portions of her hair seemed absolutely girlish. Her body was full of nice curves, which struck George as most enigmatically pathetic. But indeed the whole of her was pathetic, very touching, very precious and fragile. Even her large, shiny, shapeless boots and the coarse sateen stuff of her dress affected him. A lump embarrassed his throat. He suddenly understood the feelings of Mr. Haim toward her. She was inexpressibly romantic. * * * They deposited her on the bed. She sighed; then smiled. A slight flush showed on her cheek under the light of the candle which Mr. Prince was holding aloft. Mysterious creature, with the mysterious force of life flowing and ebbing incomprehensibly within her! To George she was marvelous, she was beautiful, as she lay defenseless and silently appealing.

With Marguerite, the factotum's daughter, George quarrels. Mr. Bennett gives us reasons for this quarrel, but the reader suspects, even if George does not, that he is ravished by the magnificence surrounding Lois, whom he marries. The magnificence does not belong to Lois, it belongs to Miss Wheeler of the wonderful complexion, who spends "half a million francs a year." But Lois is part of Miss Wheeler's entourage. Lois is ambitious. And George is, too, ambitious for money and all sorts of distinction. It is not the ambition of intellectual curiosity that makes him want to know things; it is the ambition of vanity. And, Mr. Bennett lets us know, there is no ambition in Marguerite. She is tranquil. So George marries Lois, who "inspires" him to enter, at twenty-two, a competition to build a great town hall, while Marguerite marries Prince, an etcher of talent but unknown to the Sunday supplements—hence a failure. George wins in the competition. The outbreak of the war finds him married, with three children, but dimly unsatisfied. He enlists. At the end we see him accompanying a Major on a round of minor purchases in a chartered bus—steel nib pens and such like minutiae.

Mr. Bennett's satire was never so keen, so delightful. The scene at the opening of the great town hall is a thing to revel in. The fitfulness of adolescent ambition is acutely rendered. In the suicide of the marvelously complexioned Miss Wheeler we glimpse a rift of the sardonic. On the whole the book is one of Mr. Bennett's lighter efforts, but gleaming with wit—not microscopically alive like the Five Towns books, but living, nevertheless, in a way that it is a delight to realize.

COMMON CAUSE

COMMON CAUSE. By Samuel Hopkins Adams. Illustrated. The Houghton Mifflin Company. $1.60 net.

NEWSPAPER stories have, generally speaking, a way of running in either one or the other of two well-worn grooves. If short stories, they usually tell of a cub reporter who scores some kind of a remarkable "beat"; if novels, they usually relate the history of a young man who becomes possessor of a moribund newspaper, and by his brains, energy and idealism revives the paper and does wonders for the town or small city in which the story is placed. Mr. Adams's new book belongs to this latter class, but Jeremy Robeson, his very much alive hero, has something more difficult, more dangerous, and more insidious to fight than the customary graft or political corruption; he has to fight the propaganda which would have made of the Middle-Western State of Centralia nothing

IN SPRINGTIME BOOK FIELDS

Many Important Publications Promised That Show a Return to Pre-War Conditions

THE advance lists of the publishers always give, at about this time, alluring glimpses of the pleasures to which lovers of books can look forward during the coming months, and they also offer an interesting prophecy of what new direction is likely to be taken by those currents and tendencies of popular taste which give such unerring evidence of how the people of a country are feeling and of what they are thinking. Therefore it is with the keenest interest that THE NEW YORK TIMES REVIEW OF BOOKS offers to its readers an advance survey of what the book publishers are preparing for the first publishing season after the end of the world war. It is not an exhaustive account, which would tax far too much the available space of THE REVIEW OF BOOKS, but it does endeavor, by making one or two selections from some of the important classifications of the books to be issued by each publisher, to give both an inkling of some of the best things the public can expect and a general survey of the field of new Spring books.

Fiction will, apparently, be as much the favorite as in former years, after having its leadership somewhat disputed by war books and history and biography for several seasons, and many very interesting novels, only a few of which can be mentioned here, are promised by the publishers. A new novel by V. Blasco Ibanez, whose "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" has been perhaps the most widely read work of fiction in the last six months, is promised by E. P. Dutton & Co. Its theme will be connected with German submarine warfare on the coast of Spain and its title will be "Mare Nostrum"—"Our Sea." This house will bring out also the first complete English translation of a famous South American novel, "Amalia," José Marmol's historical romance of Argentina in the days of the Dictator Rosas, and will inaugurate its promised American edition of the novels of Leonard Merrick, with introductions by famous American and English novelists. Putnams announce a new book of South African stories by Cynthia Stockley. Harpers have brought out "The Desert of Wheat," a romance of the wheat lands of the West and the loyalty of American farmers, by Zane Grey, and a political novel by Rupert Hughes, "The Cup of Fury." Dorans have published, among others, novels by Patrick MacGill and Arnold Bennett, the former called "The Doughboys," and telling a war story about American, Irish, and English soldiers, and the latter entitled "The Roll-Call," and centring about the son of Hilda Lessways. "The Curious Quest" is the title of a novel by E. Phillips Oppenheim, narrating the adventures of a rich young idler who started out to prove that he could earn his own living, just published by Little, Brown & Co., who will have also a new novel by W. L. George, whose title is not yet chosen, dealing with English social conditions during the war.

A new book by Archibald Marshall, whose growing circle of readers look upon him as a modern Anthony Trollope, will have a book of short stories to be published by Dodd, Mead & Co., called "The Clintons, and Others." The Appletons will have a novel by Thomas Dixon, dealing with woman's economic independence, entitled "The Way of a Man." The Stokes Company promise a new novel by Gertrude Atherton, a mystery story involving California and New York society and having the title "The Avalanche." "The Hohenzollerns in America and Other Impossibilities," which the John Lane Company will publish, will narrate Stephen Leacock's satiric vision of the Hohenzollerns and Hapsburgs coming to the United States as immigrants to earn their own livings. Eleanor H. Porter's "Dawn," which Houghton Mifflin Company will publish, will be the story of a blind boy who wins through to self-mastery and success and then dedicates his life to the service of the soldiers blinded in this war.

The fiction list of the Macmillan Company will include Ida M. Tarbell's "How the War Came to Sabinsport," Mary S. Watts's "From Father to Son," and May Sinclair's "Mary Olivier," besides other novels by well-known authors. Among the fiction of Duffield & Co. there are "His Majesty's Diplomacy," a historical romance by Percy Brebner scened in the days of Louis XIV.; "The Blue String," by Alma Newton, author of "Memories," and "The Amateur Man," by W. R. Gaut, which tells how a successful man heard the call to altruistic service. "Wild Youth and Another" will be Sir Gilbert Parker's contribution to Spring fiction, a romance staged in the Canadian West, to be published by J. B. Lippincott Company. Alfred A. Knopf will bring out a translation of "Caesar or Nothing," by the famous Spanish novelist, "Pio Baroja." Scribners will have a collection of stories, most of them having the world war as a background, by Henry van Dyke, "The Valley of Vision," and "Saint's Progress," by John Galsworthy, a tale of the careers of two women against the background of the war. George Agnew Chamberlain's "White Man," telling the romantic story of the flight by airplane of a man and a woman into the heart of Africa, will be published by the Bobbs-Merrill Company. Moffat, Yard & Co. have just introduced to American readers the Norwegian novelist Johann Bojer, with his novel, famous in Europe, "The Great Hunger." Mary Heaton Vorse is on the list of the Century Company with a story of Greenwich Village, "I've Come to Stay," as is also Eleanor Mercein Kelly with a tale of Kentucky, "Why Joan?"

Doubleday, Page & Co. will have new novels by Joseph Conrad and Eleanor Glasgow, the former entitled "The Arrow of Gold," the latter, a story of the last two years, "The Builders," and a new story, a comedy, by the author of "Elizabeth and Her German Garden," which will bear the title, "Christopher and Columbus." A posthumous story by William De Morgan, "The Old Madhouse," is promised by Henry Holt & Co. Small, Maynard & Co. will publish "The Best Short Stories of 1918," edited by Edward J. O'Brien, uniform with the three previous volumes.

Books about the war are still numerous, although personal experiences are beginning to give way to those of a more historical or general character, while a number of volumes dealing with the problems growing out of the war show how anxiously men's minds are considering the future. Major Ian Hay Beith in "The Last Million," promised by Houghton Mifflin Company, will tell how the American doughboys discovered England and France and how they reacted to their new experiences. "Throttled!" by Inspector Thomas J. Tunney, head of the bomb squad of the New York Police Department, which Small, Maynard & Co. will publish, gives an inside view of some of the German intrigue in America during the war. Doubleday, Page & Co. will have André Cheradame's discussion of "The Sole Cause of the War." The Century will offer the second volume of "Raemakers's Cartoon History of the War." Dodd, Mead & Co. will bring out "The Reference History of the Great War," prepared by editors of the New International Encyclopedia and designed especially for reference use. This house will have also "The War Diary of a Diplomat," by Lee Meriwether of the embassy to France, who spent much time investigating German war prisons. "The Diary of a German Soldier," by Feldwebel C., which Alfred A. Knopf will publish, will be a war book of personal experience from the German point of view.

Ellsworth Huntington of Yale University has written a book on "World Power and Evolution," which the Yale University Press will publish, in which he applies to the problems growing out of the world war his theory of the influence of climate on human affairs which has attracted wide attention. "Africa and the World War," in which Benjamin Brawley discusses the importance of Africa in the war settlement, is one of the publications of Duffield & Co. Longmans, Green & Co. will have in "A League of Nations" three lectures upon a subject of worldwide interest delivered by L. Oppenheim before the Uni-more nor less than a kind of Little Germany.

When the story begins, in the year 1912, the city of Winchester, capital of the State of Centralia, is already to a very great extent in the hands of the "Federated German Societies" of the State. These control the schools, where the children are carefully drilled in singing "Deutschland Uber Alles," though they know little or nothing of "The Star-Spangled Bannier." And partly because of their eagerness to conciliate the powerful German vote, partly because most of them honestly believe they are merely plaching a harmless mixture of vanity and sentimentality, the politicians almost without exception unite in lauding the so-called German-Americans to the skies, as being "our best citizens." Young Jeremy Robson a reporter on The Record, has his first faint and indistinct glimpse of what all this implies at the meeting which opens the book. But though he is himself 100 per cent. American, as is Marcia Ames, the heroine, he is no immaculate hero, but a faulty, flesh-and-blood human being, who does not always behave exactly as he should. Moreover, he becomes deeply interested in local politics, and after a turn of fortune makes him the owner and editor of the almost defunct Guardian, joins whole-heartedly in the fight against the supposed domination of the financial and public utility corporations. The leader of this fight is State Senator Martin Embree, known as "Smiling Mart," from that Northern Tier district a majority of whose inhabitants are German.

Then the great war comes, and "the State of Centralia * * * lifted up a thousand voices of acclaim" to the news of the German advance. And when it seemed that the Kaiser was to be victorious "the loyalist imperial colony could hardly have rejoiced more openly or more fervently than did Centralia." And still the politicians would not protest for fear of the German vote, and the business men were afraid to speak because those who did were immediately made to pay the penalty for offending the organized Teutons, and Jeremy Robson of The Guardian dared not anger the advertisers who were the financial mainstay of his paper, and who were nearly all German. But when the Lusitania was sunk, an event which the Deutscher Club celebrated with a private banquet, Jeremy Robson refused to play the contamptible rôle of neutral any longer. His newspaper, alone among all those of Centralia, dared to protest, and to protest openly and emphatically. Then the fight was on, and from that moment Jeremy had his hands more than full. The entrance of the United States into the conflict made little if any difference to most of the Germans in Centralia. A few there were who dared to proclaim themselves Americans first, but they were very few, while the German-language press, both secular and religious, printed violent attacks on England, "extolling and exalting Germany, snarling at the military 'pretensions' of the United States," and the Governer of Centralia, catering to the German vote, helped to foster organizations whose slogan was "Keep the Boys at Home," and who talked about "A Rich Man's War." These prepared to bring out a newspaper which was to profess itself intensely American and to publish editorials about "American Blood for American Soil," "Our Army for Home Defense," and talk a great deal about "Our Land"—"Our Land" ostensibly meaning the United States, though another interpretation might have been present in the minds of some of the participants. It seemed that Jeremy's long struggle was about to end in defeat. But they had one and all reckoned without Miss Marcia Ames.

Marcia had spent many years in Germany, and she knew how to deal with Germans. By a very clever device she struck the Germans who had been refusing to advertise in The Guardian in their most sensitive spot—the pocketbook. By organizing the loyal women of Centralia—most of whom were members of those families whose heads had to do with the interests Jeremy had attacked in the old days—she brought victory out of defeat. Also, she aided certain laudable activities of the United States Government to bring the Germans cringing and whining to their knees, protesting that they were realy loyal Americans, devoted to the same patriotic ideas as The Guardian.

BUCK

BUCK. By Charles D. Stewart. Illustrated. Houghton Mifflin Company. $1.60 net.

AN amusing though somewhat disjointed narrative; Mr. Stewart's latest production is not exactly a novel, neither is it a series of episodes or essays or short stories. It all has to do with a very remarkable young man, one James Buckingham Summers, generally known as "Buck," whose knack of landing on his feet is really nothing less than extraordinary. He also possesses a gift for making friends of all kinds and descriptions, being on intimate terms with the philosophical Jimmie Brent, day barkeeper at the Empire Buffet, and also with Professor Arthur Holt of the Department of Hebrew and Other Oriental Languages at the State University, where Buck was a student—principally of football. It was this wide diversity in his choice of friends, moreover, which enabled Buck, not only to rescue the professor and his pretty young wife from the troubles which seemed about to fall upon them when the university officials threatened to dispense with the department of Hebrew and Other Oriental Languages, but later to be the means whereby those were reached who were able to do such expert juggling with Professor Holt's poetic and symbolical play that it actually became a highly successful extravaganza. Meanwhile, Buck left college, had some lively experiences in the moving van business, ran a society circus, invented a patent biscuit cutter, and found for himself an unusually desirable wife.

While the book could be greatly improved by radical cutting, it is often very entertaining, and every reader who has ever lived in a place at all like the Stratford Apartments will sympathize deeply with the very likable Professor Holt and the unsophisticated Cynthia.

Indeed, the description of the Stratford Apartments and their automatic elevator is one of the best things in the book, a little essay which will surely appeal to those who have learned by sad experience that quiet is a most expensive luxury. The account of the professor's play and its transformation is also well done, and so is the closely related history of how poor innocent Cynthia presently found herself involved in a perfect web of deceit. Buck himself is more agreeable than the average all-knowing and all-conquering youth who is so prominent a figure in modern popular fiction and, in short, Mr. Stewart's little book is a pleasant volume with which to while away an idle hour.

THE DESERT OF WHEAT

THE DESERT OF WHEAT. By Zane Grey. New York: Harper & Brothers.

THE best in Mr. Grey's new novel is his elemental feeling for the soil of the Northwest and the wheat it grows. Our American novel is largely urban; it has been protested in criticism of our literature that there is in it no sense of an immemorial soil, an anchorage in eternity.

It has been said of it that it is sown on the sidewalk; that it is hectic, feverish, never attaining the brooding serenity of fatefulness that comes with the deep immersion in locale, as in Hardy's Wessex novels, for example. In "The Desert of Wheat," Mr. Grey has suggested the literary possibilities in such immersion—in the descriptive passages about the wheat and the wheat field, the hills and valleys, the sense of kinship with the very soil, the brown earth. This feeling it is that imparts to the descriptive passages and some of the dialogue a certain glow. But Mr. Grey has stifled this appreciation in the interests of plot. The story deals with the criminal sabotage employed by the I. W. W. after the entrance of the United States into the war. It is an exciting story. But the author's sensitiveness to his setting makes one hope that he will one day abandon mere excitement for deeper things. Why should we not have literatures expressive of different parts of the country, each with local flavor and character? England has it, and she is a much smaller country than we are.

Kurt Dorn, the hero of the novel, is the son of a German-born farmer who reverts, with characteristic blindness, to a fanatical passion for his mother country after the entrance of the United States into the war. The father and son quarrel bitterly, and even the incursions of the I. W. W., who threaten to destroy his property, do not swerve him. He comes under the influence of their leader, Gladden, and it is only Kurt's heroic efforts which save the wheat crop from destruction. The I. W. W. men scatter phosphorus cakes over the wheat fields. They ignite when the moisture evaporates and set fire to the fields. The action through the first part of the story is swift and incessant, but gives an impression of contrivance. The daughter of Anderson, a big man in the Bend, is kidnapped, and Dorn, who loves her, effects a rescue after a hard fight. The

Has a Girl the Right to Marry for Love?

JIM CLARKE, a young lawyer, is engaged to a splendid girl, but his worldly resources do not measure up to the requirements of her family. So she is induced to marry a more acceptable suitor—a "marriage of friendship," she calls it, in which love has no place. Can she forget—or even ignore, her real lover? Should she? Here is one of civilization's acute problems, masterfully handled in this stirring novel—and its solution. Ask any bookseller for Another volume of Mr. Galsworthy's charming and characteristic essays and studies. It has a particularly timely interest in that it is so largely concerned with questions, material and artistic, of reconstruction; and it has a more special interest for Americans in many of its studies, which deal with American standards, intellectual and practical. Among the titles are: "American and Briton," "The Drama in England and America," "Impressions of France," "Balance Sheet of the Soldier-Workman," "The Road," etc. $1.50 net

QUERIES AND ANSWERS

CANADA.—Can you tell me who was the author of the old poem entitled "Darby and Joan"? Is it of English origin?

There are at least three poems which have been printed under the title "Darby and Joan." Two are of English origin. The earlier one was written by Henry Woodfall, printer to "The Public Advertiser," in Paternoster Row, Master of the Stationers' Company, in 1766, and at the time of his death, in 1769, a Common Councilman of many years' standing. In his youth he had been apprenticed to John Darby of Bartholomew Close. In 1701, and the connubial bliss of Darby and his wife, Joan, was the subject and the incentive for the old ballad. It was first printed in The Gentleman's Magazine in March, 1735, under the title "The Joys of Love Never Forgotten." It is doubtful if a copy of this old ballad can be obtained.

The later "Darby and Joan" was written by Frederick Edward Weatherley, an English barrister, who was born at Portished in 1848. He took his degree at Brasenose College, Oxford, and was called to the bar in 1887. His first volume of poems was printed in 1870. His poem of "Darby and Joan" is printed in Stedman's Victorian Anthology.

The third and probably the best known of the trio is by St. John Honeywood, a lawyer, who was a native of Leicester, Mass., where he was born in 1763. He was graduated from Yale University in 1782. He studied law at Albany, and after his admission to the bar practiced law at Salem, N. Y., until his death in 1798. His poems were published posthumously in 1801. His poem, "Darby and Joan," is printed in Stedman's American Anthology.

The Old Continental

F. E. L.—Can you tell me anything about a book entitled "The Old Continental; or, the Price of Liberty"? It had reference to affairs in Westchester County during the Revolutionary War.

This book was written by James Kirke Paulding, who with Washington Irving published "Salmagundi" in 1807, and who was Secretary of the Navy in the Cabinet of President Van Buren. "The Old Continental, or the Price of Liberty," was published in 1846. Mr. Paulding died April 9, 1860, in his home at Hyde Park, Dutchess County, N. Y., at the age of 82. His lifelong friend, Washington Irving, had passed away at Irvington, N. Y., only a few months before. The book appears to be now out of print, but copies occasionally crop up in the old-book shops.

ANSWERS FROM READERS

ALEXANDER DUANE.—"P. S." in your issue of Jan. 5 asks for the authorship of the lines beginning:

O guns, fall silent till the dead men hear.
They were entitled "The Anxious Dead," and were written by Lieut. Col. John McCrae, the author of "In Flanders Fields," and, indeed, form an answer to the latter. It is easy to understand how Dr. McCrae should thus have answered his own appeal:

Take up our quarrel with the foe!
To you from failing hands we throw
The torch; be yours to hold it high.
If ye break faith with us we die,
We shall not sleep though poppies grow in Flanders fields.

And it is pathetic to think how prophetically he wrote, for he himself sleeps in Flanders fields with thousands of other brave Canadians.

"The Anxious Dead," appeared, I believe, in The London Spectator for June 30, 1917, a year and a half after "The Flanders Fields" was published.

Information about this poem was also furnished by Murray Johnson, Woodside, N. Y., who informs us that the poem is printed in a volume of war poems entitled "In Flanders Fields" and other poems by Colonel McCrae recently published by G. P. Putnam's Sons, and was also printed on the last page of the Woman's Home Companion for October, 1918. Mitchell Fisher of Hoboken, N. J., who says that the poem appeared in the September, 1918, issue of Everybody's Magazine; Caroline McDonald, N. Y.; Mary Hamilton, N. Y.; Frank McCarty, Florence, Mass.; Mary C. Steet, Ansonia, Conn.; Mrs. Beatrice E. Carleton, Flushing, N. Y.; Mrs. Waldo L. Richi, Saratoga Springs, N. Y.; Maud Stafford, Suffern, N. Y.; Miss Helen L. Johnston, New York; Edith Gray Hallock, New York; Robert Barbour, Montclair, N. J.; Mary Goodhilley, Baltimore, Md.; Edna C. Smith, Pittsburgh, Penn.; Margaret French, N. Y.; M. S. Clark, Brooklyn; Jane R. Shaw, Charlottesville, Va.; Miss Daisy Ross, Raleigh, N. C., and Katharine Kissam Johnson, Maplewood, N. Y.

A Soul's Soliloquy

THOMAS R. MORTON.—In The Book Review of Jan. 12 J. R. inquires as to the author of "A Soul's Soliloquy." It was written by Mrs. Wenonah Stevens Abbott of Minneapolis, Minn., half of it about 1890, the balance later. The complete poem follows:

Today the journey is ended,
I have worked out the mandates of fate;
Naked, alone, undefended,
I knock at the Uttermost Gate.
Behind is life and its longing,
Its trial, its trouble, its sorrow,
Beyond is the Infinite Morning
Of a day without a tomorrow.

Go back to dust and decay,
Body, grown weary and old;
You are worthless to me from today;
No longer my soul can you hold.
I lay you down gladly forever,
For a life that is better than this;
I go where partage ne'er severs,
You into oblivion's abyss.

Lo, the gate swings wide at my knocking;
Across endless reaches I see
Lost friends, with laughter, come flocking
To give a glad welcome to me.
Farewell, the maze has been threaded,
This is the ending of strife:
Say not that death should be dreaded,
'Tis but the beginning of life.

The Fox and the Owl

Mrs. JOHN T. HARRIS.—In the issue of THE BOOK REVIEW, Dec. 29, 1918, V. M. Turner asks for information regarding an old story in rhyme called "The Fox and the Owl." The author was the late Innes Randolph of Baltimore, and the story was written originally for his own children. Later it was published by McLaughlin Brothers, and a reprint made about ten years ago. I do not think it is now on the market.

APPEALS TO READERS

MRS. PHILIP N. ARONSON.—Will some reader give me information where I can find the poem containing these lines, also by whom written? I may not quote them correctly:

And so we all, while the shadows flitting
Spin out a future of hope and pain
And pass by fate in her shadow sitting,
Knotting and tying her tangled skein.

WITH AUTHORS AND PUBLISHERS

CAPTAIN ALAN BOTT of the Royal British Flying Corps, whose "Cavalry of the Clouds," published a year ago by Doubleday, Page & Co., was one of the earliest books by air fighters, has lately reached London, after having been captured in Palestine and having had many thrilling adventures while endeavoring to escape. He has sent to his publishers the following résumé of what happened to him while he was outwitting his captors. The bare outline puts to shame the imagination of a hardened writer for the movies and challenges the ghost of Jules Verne or Scheherazade. He writes:

> You may have heard that I was wounded and captured in Palestine last March, my airplane being shot down in flames. I was a prisoner only four months, but spent two more in escaping. I made four attempts to get away and was recaptured three times, but succeeded the fourth. I got into a hospital in Constantinople by shamming mental derangement and made my plans while there. I escaped with an Australian Captain named White. We knocked about Constantinople for two or three weeks, White disguised as a frowsy Turk and I sometimes as a German officer in mufti and sometimes as a Russian sailor. We then stowed away on a dirty little tramp steamer, crossing the Black Sea to Odessa. The Turkish police searched the boat six times, but we managed to dodge them by hiding in the ballast tanks under the propeller shaft. In Odessa we got false passports as Russians, lay low in a small room in the Bolshevist quarter, evading the German and Austrian troops, and were both ill for a time. When we heard that the Allies were occupying Bulgaria we stole to the docks in the night time and hid on a ship bound for Varna, a Russian General, disguised as an engineer's mate, and a British spy going with us. From Varna we made our way to Sophia and joined the British Army of Occupation.

Of special interest because of the recent arrival in this country from Siberia of Catherine Breshkovsky, lifelong Russian patriot, is the new and popular edition of her reminiscences and letters to be published this week by Little, Brown & Co. The original edition of these memoirs of the "Little Grandmother of the Revolution," edited by Alice Stone Blackwell, was published about two years ago and had reached the sixth printing.

"Guarantees of Peace," ready for publication by Harper & Brothers, is a collection of the recent addresses of President Wilson. It includes his messages and addresses from Jan. 31, 1918, to Dec. 2, 1918, as well as the later diplomatic correspondence with Germany and Austria-Hungary, with the corrected text of the armistice as an appendix. The volume will supplement the two earlier collections, "Why We Are at War," and "In Our First Year of War."

"A Gentle Cynic," by Dr. Morris Jastrow, Jr., which the J. B. Lippincott Company will publish this week, is a fresh translation of Ecclesiastes, with an account of how it came to be written, who wrote it, and of the additions that were made to the original text.

Philip Gibbs, whose daily dispatches furnished the readers of THE NEW YORK TIMES with accounts of the progress of the war for four years, will this Winter and Spring make his first visit to the United States. He will deliver a few lectures and will send back a series of articles to The London Daily Chronicle dealing with his impressions of America. Mr. Gibbs's two brothers, Cosmo Hamilton and Hamilton Gibbs, are both well known in this country.

The Stokes Company announces the fourth printing, completing 200,000 copies, of Lieutenant Streeter's new book of rookie love letters, "That's Me All Over, Mable." Of the previous volume, "Dere Mable," they have printed 600,000 copies.

Samuel Hopkins Adams, author of "Common Cause," has been for some time engaged in war work in Washington.

A new volume of studies and essays by John Galsworthy, to be called "Another Sheaf," is being published this week by the Scribners. It is largely concerned with questions of reconstruction, and some of its studies deal with American standards.

Small, Maynard & Co. have ready for immediate publication Edward J. O'Brien's annual year book, the fourth of the American short story, "The Best Short Stories of 1918," Mr. O'Brien has recently sailed for England and expects to live for the next year at Oxford.

"Socialism and Americanism," by William Starr Myers, Professor of Politics in Princeton University, which the Princeton University Press will publish this Spring, is a discussion of the basic principles of these two political systems and an inquiry as to whether or not there is any likeness between them. The author thinks very decidedly that socialism is not American.

William Lyon Phelps has written a book on "Reading the Bible," to be published in the Spring by the Macmillan Company, which considers the Bible as a part of English literature, and discusses it purely from the literary point of view.

"Kirk's Cartoons," which the Marshall Jones Company will publish this Spring, will be a collection of drawings showing the comic aspects of a soldier's life.

Two novels ready for publication this week by E. P. Dutton & Co. are "The Crescent Moon," by F. Brett Young, and "The Challenge to Sirius," by Sheila Kaye-Smith. The former author, who published a year or so ago in "Marching on Tanga" the first account of General Smuts's successful military operations in German East Africa, has laid the scene of his novel in the same region. Mrs. Kaye-Smith's story begins in England, crosses to the southern part of the United States during the civil war, goes on to Central America, and finally returns to England for its ending.

Frederic C. Howe, in his new book, "The Only Possible Peace," which the Scribners will publish this week, makes a study of the causes of the war and of the road toward peace. He surveys the economic development of modern Germany and concludes that the war was due as much to the industrial as to the Junker class.

In Maurice Francis Egan's "Ten Years Near the German Frontier," an account of things he saw and learned while he was United States Minister to Denmark, he tells a story of Prussian rule in Danish Holstein, of which it was a cardinal principle that the Danish colors, red and white, were not to be displayed. In one city, he says, the Grand High Town Council notified a Danish burgher that he would have to repaint his red dog kennel and make it another color, because he had a white dog in it. Dr. Egan is making a lecture tour of the eastern part and Middle Western parts of the United States, recounting his experience with German intrigue while in Denmark.

Harper & Brothers are bringing out this week "Retail Credits and Collections," by Dwight E. Beebe, the third volume in their Retail Business Series. The author is assistant Professor in Business English at the New York University of Commerce and has lectured extensively on credits and collections.

Lawrence F. Abbott of the editorial staff of The Outlook is writing a book to be entitled "Impressions of Theodore Roosevelt," which Doubleday, Page & Co. will bring out at an early date. Mr. Abbott was a lifelong friend of Colonel Roosevelt, accompanied him in 1910 on his trip through Egypt, Europe, and Great Britain, and during his four years as contributing editor of The Outlook was in daily intimate contact with him.

A new book by Charles G. D. Roberts, "Jim: The Story of a Backwoods Police Dog," will be among the Macmillan Spring publications.

E. P. Dutton & Co. are publishing this week the initial volume in their new "Library of French Fiction," through which they hope to acquaint American readers with life, people and manners in France outside of Paris, with which so much of French fiction that has been translated into English has dealt. The scenes of some of the volumes will be laid in Paris, but most of them will depict life in the provinces. All of them will be by modern novelists of distinction. The general editor of the series is Barnet J. Beyer. The first volume, ready for publication this week, is "Jacquou, the Rebel," by Eugene Le Roy, translated by Eleanor S. Brooks.

The Hexateuch

A book by Professor Edgar Sheffield Brightman of Wesleyan University entitled "The Sources of the Hexateuch" will interest critical Bible students. It presents the English texts of the Javistic or Judean Narrative, the Elthistc or Ephraimitic Narrative, and the Priestly Code; each as a complete unity, "according to the analysis upon which a majority of modern scholars are agreed," important variations of opinion being mentioned in notes. (Abingdon Press. $3.)

—face to face with the eternal impulses of life,

—two men and a woman, completely isolated from the civilized world, work out their destiny through the instincts and impulses of primitive man. A fantastic tale, yet real and plausible, thrilling in parts, and as whimsical as "The City of Beautiful Nonsense."

LEONARD MERRICK'S latest novel

While Paris Laughed

Being Pranks and Passions of the Poet Tricotrin

Anyone who knew Paris when that laughing city was the world's playground will find here a delicately tinted portrait in miniature of the thing he loved—gay, brilliant Paris at play. The book's light inconsequence is extraordinarily skilful, exceedingly amusing. The escapades of the elegant, preposterous Tricotrin and his absurd companions are ridiculous in the extreme, but they are the effervescence of an irrepressible lightheartedness that is a gift of the gods. There is scarcely one novelist in a generation who can transfer it to print without dulling its sparkle. In these days there is only Leonard Merrick.

"Had Leonard Merrick been born in France his brilliancy, wit, pathos and keen insight into life would have made his name a household word no less than Alphonse Daudet."—The Nation.

LATEST WORKS OF FICTION

I. W. W. is treated throughout the story as if it were a German agency, but Mr. Grey shows a realization that some of the men, though misguided, have a real grievance. The novel does not impress one as being a deeply felt picture of labor conditions in the Northwest. One gets the sense that Mr. Grey has used the I. W. W. outbreaks as a literary device.

Kurt Dorn goes to war, though he is needed more acutely in the wheat fields than in the trenches. One of the most touching episodes in the book relates to Andorson's son, who does not appear till after the middle of the book, and then only through his letters to his sister. The boy, though under age, has enlisted and is waiting anxiously to be sent across to fight for his country. But conditions in the camp were bad: insufficicnt clothing, pneumonia rampant. The boy dies and the father's outburst is extermely moving. In all, Mr. Grey has written a very readable and engrossing story with a suggestion of what he might do if he turned his interest to character instead of to "thrills."

APARTMENT NEXT DOOR

THE APARTMENT NEXT DOOR. By William Johnston. With illustrations by Arthur William Brown. Boston: Little, Brown & Co. $1.50.

JANE STRONG, beautiful, idle, young, wanted to do something for her country—nurse the wounded in France or drive an ambulance. She was the only daughter of a rich New York family who lived in a luxurious apartment on Riverside Drive—and it was the accident of that apartment's location that drew her into the thick of work as exciting and as important as her Lieutenant-brother's fighting overseas. For Jane, who had not had a nurse's training, and who could not "get to France," found herself suddenly a trusted employe of the United States Secret Service, helping to run down a dangerous German spy; her parents' apartment looked out over the Hudson, where the transports and their convoys lay waiting to sail; and in the apartment next door there were strange matters afoot.

Out of this situation, in itself rich in possibility of interest—a young American girl detailed to spy upon the questionable doings of her neighbors in a Riverside apartment—Mr. Johnston has built a story full of thrills and surprises. It is a tale of the successful combating of a piece of intricate German intrigue, and it goes into clever and exciting details in a clever and exciting fashion. But it does not follow merely the usual plan of thwarting the villain and foiling the machinations of the plotting enemy alien; it introduces an ingenious element of romance; it is with the suspected man that Jane Strong falls in love.

Mr. Johnston has constructed his story well, and has told it in a way to keep the reader absorbed till the end. From the moment when Jane is virtually the witness to a murder to the time of the novel's amazing dénouement, the suspense is kept up, and there is a constant stream of exciting incident. Its definite location in New York City adds to its verisimilitude. "The Apartment Next Door" is a thrillingly interesting book.

THE GOLF COURSE MYSTERY

THE GOLF COURSE MYSTERY. By Chester K. Steele. Illustrated. George Sully & Co. $1.50 net.

Mr. Steele's new story, "The Golf Course Mystery," reintroduces to the reader the fisherman-detective, Colonel Robert Lee Ashley, who solved "The Diamond Cross Mystery." This time Colonel Ashley is summoned to decide why it was that Mr. Horace Carwell, wealthy sportsman, yacht owner, and automobilist, dropped dead at the last hole, just as he was winning an important golf match. An autopsy showed that Mr. Carwell had been poisoned, and that by some strange and unknown drug, or mixture of drugs; but was the poison self-administered, or was it a case of murder? Carwell's beautiful daughter Viola insisted that he had not committed suicide, and the more the situation was investigated the more complicated it all became. But there were circumstances which made it seem that Carwell must have been murdered, and of course several innocent persons were suspected and made more or less uncomfortable before the real perpetrator of the deed was discovered by the astute Colonel.

The story holds one's attention, but the solution proves rather irritating, making the reader feel that the author has not been quite fair with him in introducing various incidents into the story in such a way that at the time they seem important—incidents which later prove to have been inserted merely for the purpose of adding apparent complications to a mystery with which they have, in fact, nothing to do. The book contains two love stories, both of which end happily, and a villain with whom no one can possibly sympathize.

AFTER-THE-WAR BOOKS

NOW that the war is over, will we have an increasing tide of war books, or will public interest in the matter of reading strike out into entirely new literary fields? Judging by the forecast of the coming season's books, published elsewhere in this number of THE BOOK REVIEW, fiction is winning back, or is attempting to win back, its former place in popular favor, and there appear to be, in consequence, a smaller number of thoroughgoing war books than we have had during the last four years. This showing, however, can hardly be taken as an indication of the kind of books likely to find favor as a result of the war's conclusion and the coming of peace. This for the reason that a large majority of the books to be published in the immediate future were contracted for and written before the war was over; and, consequently, cannot be taken as a reflection of the demand that has been created since the momentous happenings of last November. There can be no doubt, of course, that the great conflict just concluded will furnish a countless variety of themes to the writers of books for many years to come, and that for a considerable period in the near future it may continue to occupy a foremost place in our literature. In a recent analysis of the problem The Publishers' Weekly argues that war books will grow in popularity from now on because, "while war material decreases in the newspapers, reading of war books is likely to increase." We are told further:

> When the armistice was signed, the first instinct of every bookseller was to think of rapidly cutting down his stock of war books and of turning them into money for new purposes. While there can be no doubt that there will be new aspects of public reading opened out by peace, yet second thought shows that it will be a great mistake to underestimate the tremendous amount of continuing reading that there will be on all phases of the war. For years to come the Great War will be the greatest field of writing and discussion, and the material for the complete knowledge of its various aspects will be gradually collected and discussed.

REASONING from similar conditions in the past, prophecies of an avalanche of war books succeeding the declaration of peace are more or less groundless. Such a change in current literature did not, for instance, follow the conclusion of the civil war, nor—to go back a hundred years for a more exact analogy—did the end of the Napoleonic wars produce the superabundant war literature that seems to be expected now. Nevertheless, it is worth remembering that the peace following Waterloo did inaugurate a change in the books of the period that, looking back on it today, seems worthy to be called the new spirit in literature, the spirit that gave to literature its radical departure from the characteristic artificialities of the eighteenth century, and that in its sincerity and fine romanticism revived much of the splendor of the Elizabethans. WORDSWORTH, SHELLEY, BYRON, KEATS, COLERIDGE were the regnant poets in that epochal second decade of the last century, and from them it is easy enough to trace the vitalizing influence that later on made possible such singers as BROWNING, TENNYSON, SWINBURNE, ROSSETTI, MEREDITH, ARNOLD, and a score of minor poets, all of whom contribute something that still appears to be undying to the Victorian age in literature. Even more significant, possibly, is the change wrought in prose fiction a century ago. For it was in the same second decade that saw the best works of WORDSWORTH and SHELLEY, that the novels of Sir WALTER SCOTT and JANE AUSTEN first made their appearance, bringing with them a complete change in the art and methods of the novelist and in the taste of the readers of novels. Just what influence the Napoleonic wars may have had in bringing about these changes in literature it is difficult to say. In her recent book of reminiscences Mrs. HUMPHRY WARD declares that the fiction of our generation will be molded largely on themes growing out of the great war that has just ended or else our novels will be lacking in vitality. Certainly, in their day Miss AUSTEN and the author of "Waverley" did not so interpret literature in its relation to the great historical events through which they had just passed. Neither of them thought it necessary to write novels based on the Napoleonic wars. Reasoning by historical analogy, however, is often misleading—and it may very well be that the best of our novelists will do the exact reverse of what SCOTT and Miss AUSTEN did.

IT was only a comparatively short time ago that we had, to the undoubted grief of his admirers, a posthumous volume of SWINBURNE'S poems. The collection, one could not but hope, completed the disagreeable aftermath with which Death sometimes pursues the fame of our greatest poets. But this regrettable posthumous volume has been succeeded by a series of fourteen poems, hitherto unpublished, that have now found their way into print, and one wonders if the posthumous sins of one of the last generation's greatest poets have not finally "come around full circle." Such publications emphasize the necessity for a law—moral or statutory—for the post-mortem protection of the makers of our literature. SWINBURNE, in all that he published during his lifetime, manifested the greatest care of an art to the study, expression, and perfection of which he devoted his life. He was a prolific writer—in his field none more so—and in his ceaseless literary activity he turned out a great deal of material that his mature judgment condemned to oblivion. He left a mass of "unconsidered trifles" among his manuscripts, trifles that, on second thought, did not come up to his standard of the poetic art, and to these he denied publicity. Accepting his verdict, we are not to regard them as genuinely worthy a place among the "Poems of Swinburne." They are to be viewed simply as curiosities incidental to the development of the Swinburnian muse—and in this capacity alone they furnish a sort of biographical interest that we could, after all, do very well without.

ON more than one occasion the BOOK REVIEW'S Department of "Queries and Answers" has brought to the attention of its readers bits of valuable literary information, memorable passages of prose and poems that carry the ring of genuine feeling. Last week there was published in this department a notable specimen of the latter that, among poems of the war, seems well worth remembrance. The query that called forth information as to the authorship, &c., of this poem was answered by Mrs. GEORGE D. MAYO, the mother of the poet GEORGE MORROW MAYO, who served in the United States Navy in anti-submarine work during the whole period following our entrance into the war. His verse, with its fine virile swing, forms an admirable addition to the union of the Blue and the Gray as it has been consecrated anew in the fight for democracy in the fields of France:

> When we meet on the fields of France;
> May the spirit of Grant be with you all
> As the sons of the North advance.
> And here's to the gray of the sun-kissed South,
> When we meet on the fields of France;
> May the spirit of Lee be with you all
> As the sons of the South advance.
> And here's to the Blue and Gray as one,
> When we meet on the fields of France;
> May the Spirit of God be with you all
> As the sons of the Flag advance.

versity of Cambridge. Macmillans announce "The Vision for Which We Fought," by Arthur M. Simons. Lieutenant Coningsby Dawson will tell and the John Lane Company will publish in "Living Bayonets" a record of the last year of the war. The same house will have in "S. O. S.: America's Miracle in France," by Isaac F. Marcosson, an authoritative account of the enormous work of the United States in preparing for, feeding, equipping, and transporting our army in France.

Among the books offered by E. P. Dutton & Co. there is a volume of speeches and articles by Premier Clemencean, "France Facing Germany"; a work by Elisha M. Friedman on "Labor and Reconstruction in Europe," which will give a comprehensive account of the problems, needs, and plans in all the European countries, and a compact review of the martial and civilian achievements of this country in the prosecution of the war by Florence Finch Kelly, to be called "What America Did." George H. Doran Company will have in "Full Speed Ahead" a survey by Secretary Josephus Daniels of the navy's achievements in the war, its present needs, and its possibilities of future achievements. The same house will provide in Gustave Ohlinger's "The German Conspiracy in American Education" a new exposé of German intrigue. In "The Days That Shook the World," which Boni & Liveright will publish, John Reed will attempt to tell in detail the story of the Bolshevist seizure of power in Russia. Appletons promise a series of books dealing with war developments and problems of reconstruction. The series will contain about thirty volumes, each one dealing with some special phase, of which about half a dozen will be published early this season. Among these will be "Government Organization in War Time and After," by W. F. Willoughby; "The Redemption of the Disabled," by Garrard Harris; "The Strategy of Minerals," by George R. Smith, "Government Insurance in War Time and After," by Samuel McCune Lindsay; "The Colleges in War Time and After," by Park R. Kolbe. The Appletons will have also Brand Whitlock's long-awaited work on Belgium, in two large volumes. Putnams announce "The World War and Its Consequences," by William Herbert Hobbs, with an introduction by Theodore Roosevelt, and "The Chaos in Europe," by Frederick Moore, a consideration of the political destruction in Russia and elsewhere and of the international policies of America. Harpers have in train for early publication "Experiments in International Administration," by Francis Bowes Sayre, and "Bolshevism versus Democracy," by John Spargo.

In biography, history, poetry, and general literature there will be some interesting volumes, although one of the striking features of this Spring season, inducive of speculation as to the reasons for it, is the paucity of books of special importance and interest in these classifications. The Houghton Mifflin Company will have a second series of "A Treasury of War Poetry," compiled by George Herbert Clarke. Rudyard Kipling's new collection of poems, "The Years Between," will come from Doubleday, Page & Co. Alfred A. Knopf announces "Washington: The Man Who Made Us," in which Percy MacKaye puts into the form of drama what is said to be a picturesque biography of George Washington. Boni & Liveright will bring out "The Modern Book of English Verse," an anthology, edited, with an introduction, by Richard Le Gallienne, and in their Penguin Series a collection of articles by Mark Twain, hitherto unpublished. The Stokes Company is preparing "Clemenceau: The Man and His Time," by H. M. Hyndman. From Fleming H. Revell Company will come "A Bulwark Against Germany," by Bogumil Vosnjak, which explains the political, historical, social, and economic evolution of the Slovenese, and a work on "Alcohol and the Human Race," by Captain Richmond Pearson Hobson. B. W. Huebsch promises a study of the development of "The American Novel," by Ludwig Lewisohn, and "Winesburg, Ohio," a social and literary analysis and study of certain geographical phases of American life. From the Yale University Press will come "Idealism and the Modern Age," by George Plimpton Adams, and Wilbur L. Cross's "History of Henry Fielding." Among the many volumes to be offered by the Macmillan Company will be Owen Wister's "The Ancient Grudge," a discussion of anti-British prejudice in America, and "Historical Papers of the Late Henry Adams, with a Memoir by Brooks Adams." "A Life of Marshal Foch," by Raymond Recouly of the French General Staff, will come from the house of Scribner. Henry Holt & Co. will publish "Fifty Years of Europe," by Charles Downer Hazen, and "The New Era in Poetry," by Louis Untermeyer. "Modern Japan" will be a comprehensive study of all phases of Nippon as it is today, by Amos S. Hershey and Susanne W. Hershey, to be published by the Bobbs-Merrill Company. "A Peace Conference of Intrigue," translated, with notes and introduction, by Harry Hansen from Frederick Freksa's work, which the Century Company will publish, will be a history of the great World Congress of 1815 at Vienna. Francis Loring Fyne's "The Story of Versailles," promised by Moffat, Yard & Co., will give American readers an interesting background for the Peace Conference. "The Burgomaster of Stilemonde," Maeterlinck's new play contrasting German and Belgian character, will be published by Dodd, Mead & Co.

ROMANTICS, IMAGISTS, SYMBOLISTS, AND OTHERS

everyday life." This return, however, if put psychologically, means essentially a return to a literature of the senses. For realism is most largely concerned with the senses and sense-observation of life.

A revolt from realism to classicism means that the sensuous has become dull and unsatisfying, and that poets and public want more of the literature of the mind and soul.

A revolt from classicism to romanticism can likewise only mean that writers are no longer finding the things of the mind and soul sufficiently stimulating to the poetic faculty. Therefore they reach out into the marvels, mysteries, and wonders that surround life—even into the supernatural or cosmically unknown.

If realism is thus the literature of the senses, it is easy to see that impressionism, futurism, and imagism are but minor forms of it. Impressionism is the literature of sense impressions that are evanescent or atmospheric. Imagism is but static impressionism stripped of atmosphere and subjectivity. Futurism but a clamor for sense impressions that are "primitive" or brutally real.

In like manner transcendentalism and idealism are but sublimated forms of classicism; and the kinship of symbolism and mysticism to romanticism becomes manifest. Symbolists either wish to express life mysteriously—"in a way that cannot be analyzed" the French Symbolists put it; or to express the mysteries of life under certain forms or symbols that will give them a suggestive concreteness. Mystics, on the other hand, are but romantics who mount out of sense, mind, and soul to some transcendent unity with the universe or God.

That this analysis is correct must, I believe, be admitted. With its critical recognition we should be better able to comprehend the need or value of changing from any one of these "isms" to another and the defects literary minds are likely to fall into in making the change. Mere rebels, for example, would not so easily be able to shout or cackle as if by merely rebelling they had laid the egg from which all future criticism and creation must proceed. Rebels with a real variant of any "ism" could get a hearing without going through the confused process of overestimation and consequent underestimation at the hands of the academics. Finally, we should recognize that all "newnesses" in poetry are but variants of these three fundamental forms, and so be able more quickly to place them.

This letter does not permit any extensive or illustrative development of these conclusions. But enough has been said, perhaps, to show how much confusion would be avoided by their recognition. It is at least certain that the use of terms whose fundamental relationships are not realized must inevitably lead unclear minds to deceive—or be deceived.

Major William A. Dawkins of the Police Reserve of New York City and Inspector Cornelius F. Cahalane of the New York City police, in a volume entitled "Police Reserve and Home Defense Guard Manual," present useful practical information and instruction for the guidance of members of organizations established in New York and other cities for co-operation with the regular police. The authors treat their subject with notable directness and intelligence. (E. P. Dutton & Co. $1.)

DUTTON'S Library of French Fiction

Edited by BARNET J BEYER, Sometime Lecturer at the Sorbonne

French fiction as known to the general novel-reading public in America has been both limited and productive of some very curious notions as to French social life. By its wide scope this series aims to present, through translations of some of the best French novels, the life of the provinces, as well as of Paris, the customs and manners of all types and classes of modern French society. The first issues of the series are:—

Jacquou the Rebel By Eugene Le Roy

Reveals the sturdy rural communities of Perigord, where neither the conditions of life nor the gentle qualities of the people had changed from the period of this novel to the time of the present war. $1.50 NET.

LUXEMBURG
And Her Neighbours
By Ruth Putnam

From The New York Tribune:

"Miss Putnam has made a fine contribution to historical literature in this beautiful and scholarly volume. She gives a luminous account of the history of Luxemburg down to the French Revolution, and from that time forward her narrative is so lucid as to present an unsurpassed conspectus of the involved status of that remnant of a once extensive and powerful realm. Written in an attractive style and provided with historical maps and many exquisite illustrations, the volume will stand in the foremost rank of authoritative works on its subject."

The Only Possible Peace

BY FREDERIC C. HOWE

Commissioner of Immigration of the Port of New York.

Dr. Howe sees the European war from an entirely new angle as a struggle for imperialism of world states and primarily economic. He sketches the economic development of Germany, the colossal banking institutions, the industrial imperialistic classes that have risen to power during the last twenty-five years, and traces the war to the industrial rather than exclusively to the Junker class.

The road to a durable peace is through ending the struggle for exclusive territories; by the opening up of the world to freedom; by the ending of economic exploitation and the conquest of weak peoples. He would place the Mediterranean, the Balkan States, Turkey, and Asia Minor under international control.

ROMANTICS, IMAGISTS, SYMBOLISTS, AND OTHERS

New York Times Review of Books:

THOUGH America's poetry criticism just now promises well, in spite of some incredibly deluded judgments, a constant protest rises against the "personal" nature of a portion of it. This portion largely emanates from certain poet-critics or poetry centres and proceeds under logical defenses which it should be interesting to examine. They are mainly two: One that "no permanent standards of judging poetry exist," and the other that "no satisfactory definition of what poetry is can be agreed upon."

The first of these assertions is in high favor with the "ultra-moderns"—whose extremism in poetry makes as dull reading as academicism itself. As dull, that is, to those "moderns" who hold that art freedom and finality no more spring from excesses than from conservatism. Who believe, on the contrary, that only a selective liberalism offers both the repose and unrest necessary to permanently interesting creativeness.

In calling attention to this, as I do, and to the fact that the creed of "no standards" seems self-destructive, I am not to be construed as opposing free verse movements. Such verse I have ever used—though not the unimpassioned, unimaginative, insufficiently rhythmical prose kinds, and not with the belief that it is a substitute for inspiration. Neither it, however, nor any quality of poetry old or new has any necessary bearing upon the assertion that "judging poetry is nine-tenths a matter of preference, not of applying standards." That assertion, being merely a denial of all authoritativeness in criticism, inevitably destroys any worth in its own practice—except such as comes from the mere pleasure of expressed opinions.

This would be admitted, but there is more. The tone of the "no standards" criticism rarely indicates that its adherents really believe themselves incapable of giving the reader permanent guidance or of exacting faith from him. On the contrary, an intolerant confidence in its rightness makes it impatient of all "preference" save its own. Practicers of it, therefore, are not only given an opportunity for expressing their personal equation, but find in it a shelter for much "preference" arising in friendship, enmity, or ambitious desire to boost the particular kind of verse they themselves write.

Further examination of the assertion cannot be attempted here, but this much concerning its origin can be said. Preference is fundamental in all judgment, as faith—according to Mr. Balfour's famous argument—is the foundation of all belief. Most people, for example, prefer the beautiful to the ugly, the true to the false, the noble to the base. But since times come when conventional imitations of the beautiful cause revolt to the ugly; when banality brings craving for the new, though it be false; or when the uninspiredly noble leads to choice of the decadent—the cry easily rises that no standards of judging poetry really exist.

These revolts are not surprising, and are often of value. What is surprising is that so many fail to see that the measure of our artistic sincerity and intelligence is not determined by revolt alone, but by the things to which we revolt—and by what we are willing to destroy. Art may depend on exasperation rather than inspiration to break its bonds, but exasperation is not inspiration. Only those extremists who take it to be so will ask us to believe that any prose dullness or absurdity articulated into lines and strung unlyrically before us makes something new and important in poetry—something no permanent standards can judge.

The second assertion that poetry cannot be satisfactorily defined is not confined to the ultra-modernists, though frequently used by them and other coterie critics in defending everything they choose to call poetry. Our inability, however, to arrive at a definition of poetry that will be as satisfactory as any other definition in this relative world seems due to several confusions.

The first of these is that some of us, instead of seeking to make our definition a scientific delimitation, make it a panegyric. When Keats calls sweet peas beautiful flowers "on tiptoe for a flight," he is not defining sweet peas, but magically praising them. So calling poetry "a mighty light that springs from the deep soul of things" is likewise praise—charming but not definitive.

Again, some demand that a definition shall be a touchstone enabling us to tell unfailingly what lines are poetry. This is like asking that a definition of gold should contain the name of the acid that detects its pureness.

Yet others, forgetting that all things are conditional, and that each must be defined in the undefined terms of others, ask for an absolute definition. Only a satisfactory working definition is required.

Finally, many do not realize that the main object of our definition is to distinguish poetry from prose, on the one hand, and from mere verse on the other. Or, if they do, they assert that, since all people through all time do not agree as to just what things are poetry, no satisfactory definition is possible. Yet experts should be able to define poetry as satisfactorily as other experts define stone or stars—provided they only seek a definition which is a descriptive delimitation of that art from any other with which it may be confused.

If these conclusions are right there is no reason why poetry experts should not as unanimously accept a working definition of poetry as experts in other fields accept other definitions. Remembering that some time ago there was an interesting discussion of this subject in the columns of the BOOK REVIEW, I offer this analysis of poetry and a consequent definition:

Poetry on its formal side is an art of rhythm, metrical or unmetrical. This rhythm must differ from prose rhythm by being more lyrically or measuredly organized. So much is shown by its division into line-lengths, and by the fact that some prose has so many of poetry's other qualities that mere division into line-lengths will suffice to give it the additional lyric value which unquestionably makes it poetry. This, however, is not the case with much so-called "polyphonic prose" which is merely camouflaged by rhymes, color-adjectives, and occasional metrical rhythms into a resemblance of poetry, as other prose is camouflaged into seeming poetry by being shredded into free verse.

On the other hand, and from the side of substance, there are many qualities—of imagination, passion, charm, &c.—which we call poetry when they are embodied in a sufficiently musical rhythm. The degree of originality, felicity, or intensity of these qualities, and of their rhythm, determines the worth of the poetry. For unless any lines in question possess some of these qualities in a measure so rare as to appeal to the real poetry experts of the generations, they must drop into the class of mere verse.

Nor does this principle fall if the supposed poetry experts of any generation fail to estimate a Shakespeare—as has happened; or if any prominent one or number of them prefer a Pope, as did Byron, to a Wordsworth, Shelley, or Keats. The critics of any generation may be right in their estimate of a poem, but only the continued survival of its lines for the experts of other generations suffices to give them final standing.

A definition of poetry, then, which will describe and delimit it from prose, on the one hand, and from mere verse, on the other, must take all this into consideration. It must, in addition, for brevity's sake, find a common term which will be inclusive of the many different qualities poetry may possess. Such a definition—though doubtless a better can be framed—I here offer:

Poetry is the expression of our experience in emotional word-rhythms more lyrically measured or organized than those of prose, and having some permanency of appeal not possessed by mere verse.

Whether this definition is accepted or not, one thing is clear. We must get rid of the "twilight zone" around poetry in which irresponsible criticism can ambush mere likes and dislikes. This can be done by the common-sense recognition that judging poetry is not "nine-tenths a matter of preference." Rareness of rhythm—just now overexaggerated in value—and of passion, imagination, &c., are immemorial standards of judging, and to them all critics must, and invariably do, appeal.

Another source of the critical confusion of both today and yesterday has been due, it seems to me, to the failure of critics to comprehend the fundamental relationships of realism, classicism, and romanticism—and of the subvarieties of each. For that impressionism, symbolism, mysticism, idealism, transcendentalism, futurism, imagism, &c., are but varieties of these three fundamental divisions of poetry, or of other literature, can easily be shown.

An investigation of literary history would reveal, I fancy, that revolts against realism tend to pass through classicism to romanticism—and the circle is completed by the revolt from romanticism back to realism. This latter is a phenomenon we have recently been experiencing in the reaction against "Victorianism"—which is regarded as decaying romanticism.

A revolt from romanticism—or classicism—to realism is usually thought of as "a return to nature," or to "the things of

CLEMENCEAU DESCRIBES FRANCE FACING GERMANY

FRANCE FACING GERMANY: Speeches and Articles by Georges Clemenceau, Premier of France. Translated from the French by Ernest Hunter Wright. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co. $2.

AS Georges Clemenceau presides over the Peace Conference, the time is ripe, certainly, for the publication of a book of his public utterances on "France Facing Germany." The reader must be prepared, however, for an initial disappointment in opening the present volume: the last of the papers is dated May, 1916. Timely in their presentation of the war in the words of the man who now sits at the head of the peace table, the speeches and articles are not so timely as to bring the reader anywhere near to the war's conclusion, or even to the beginning of the events that paved the way for the end. The reader who expects to hear Clemenceau on the subject of the United States as a belligerent, on the Russian Revolution and débâcle, the treaties of Brest-Litovsk, the German offensive of last Spring and the turning of the tables last Summer, must renounce such expectation at once. And having renounced it he may settle down to the perusal of a notably interesting, illuminating, inspiring and in many places beautiful book.

The presentation of "France Facing Germany" goes back, in Premier Clemenceau's speeches and writings as here collected, to 1908, the first paper in the book being an address delivered at the dedication of the monument to Scheurer-Kestner in February of that year. In that speech he said:

> What sort of men should we be if, while we are doing homage to a noble Alsatian, who was an honor to France, we were capable of forgetting the story of Alsace? No one has the right to demand that we do this. * * *
> Our eyes are upon the future. Heirs of a glorious history, jealous of the splendid native passions out of which grew the cultural power of our country, we can look peacefully upon the descendants of the strong races which for centuries have measured themselves against the men of our land, on fields of battle too numerous to recount. Two great rival peoples, for the very honor of their rivalry, have the same interest in maintaining respect each for the other.

The next speech is that delivered in the Senate on the Franco-German agreement of Nov. 14, 1911, relative to Morocco. These two speeches make up the first section of the book; the second is composed of utterances in regard to the three-year law, which was being discussed on the very eve of the war; the conference of Berne, the notorious Zabern affair of 1913, and the matter of M. Hanß, who was tried for high treason at Leipsic and condemned to a year's imprisonment because, to quote M. Clemenceau:

> He felt and thought freely, in a country which is his own, where the supremacy of the "All," as M. Boutroux says, seems irreconcilable with the liberty of a part. * * * To translate all this from German into French, I may tell you quite freely that Hanai is accused of having publicly defamed the police and the school teachers of Alsace-Lorraine, by writing that the ones had thick heads and that the others had heavy hands for their Alsatian pupils; all of which tends to disturb the public peace, it is alleged in the territory of the Empire, by means of pictures which I make the mistake of finding charming, in which the little children of Alsace are presented as "Those who do not forget" to the little children on the other side of the Vosges.

One of the most significant of those early writings and speeches is that of June 16, 1914, in which M. Clemenceau says:

> Germany, long slumbering like her Barbarossa, under the legendary mountain above which ravens circled, awakened in the clash of arms, and, at first astonished herself, rediscovered herself more brutally domineering, more scientifically overbearing, than ever before. And a great burst of ambition has come to her. * * * "Deutschland uber Alles." They do not by any means conceal their designs. * * * Every day it is the hymn of conquest that the German press intones, and the children in the schools, the young men in the universities, their aged professors, and the pretty young girls who come to Paris to preach to me, to me personally, the virtue and the beauty of German war, send a chorus to the army that is quivering in excitement in its ramparts of steel. * * *
> France has her enthusiasms, her passing bursts of ardor, her passions followed by renouncements. If she stands firm in her determination to purge herself and to recreate herself worthy to continue her noble history, there is no offensive from beyond the Rhine against which she is not assured of holding her ground. If not * * *

"The Tiger" breaks off his sentence abruptly there. With the coming of war, when France held her ground month after month and year after year against that "virtue and beauty of German war" which was revealed so sickeningly to the world, Georges Clemenceau's speeches and articles become glowing tributes to the strength and the glory of France. In writing of the early weeks, when the nation threw aside the party quarrels on which Germany had counted for French weakness, in calling his people to stand firm in the sad days before the Marne, in his tributes and his inspiration through the long months of the "war of endurance," in his echo of the battle cries of Verdun, Clemenceau is not only the passionate patriot, but the man of noble words, of beautiful and unforgettable expression of noble thought and emotion. It is not to be forgotten here that "The Tiger" is literateur as well as statesman. His speeches and articles make beautiful and stirring reading here.

He has, too, many a pertinent reference to law, to international justice and civilization. "France Facing Germany" is of interest not only in its light upon events, but in its picture of the statesman who presides over the Peace Conference.

HISPANIC AMERICA

New York Times Review of Books:

WITH regard to the article in THE BOOK REVIEW of Jan. 12, I beg to express my dissent from the statement that "it is obviously incorrect to designate a continent that includes Brazil as Hispanic America." There has been much discussion of late among Hispanists as to the proper designation of the southern continent. "Spanish-American" is obviously inaccurate, as is "Portuguese-American." Some have suggested "Ibero-American," and many have favored "Latin American," but today the consensus of opinion is in favor of "Hispanic-American."

"Latin-American" is no more applicable to South America than it is to French Canada or the French islands in the Caribbean Sea. "Hispanic-American" is preferred largely because the Romans called the entire peninsula Hispania. The adjective Hispanic and the noun Hispanist have of late come into general use to designate what is either Spanish or Portuguese or both. Note, for instance, the Hispanic Society of America (in New York) and the two new publications Hispania and Hispanic American Historical Review. All three have to do with things Portuguese and Portuguese-American as well as with things Spanish and Spanish-American.

America and Britain
By ANDREW C. McLAUGHLIN,
Head of the Department of History, Chicago University.

One of the great issues of the war has been the drawing together of the two great branches of the Anglo-Saxon race in a friendly co-operation; the continuance of which is the hope of all thinking people. It is far too important a matter for merely sentimental treatment. Dr. McLaughlin's facts and arguments based on history and moral obligations were originally prepared for audiences at the University of Chicago last year. It makes clear the real harmony of the two countries whose alliance will secure the peace of the world, and is therefore incomparably important.

NOTABLE BOOKS IN BRIEF REVIEW

THE BRITISH FLEET IN THE GREAT WAR. By Archibald Hurd. New York: Robert M. McBride & Co. $2.30.

SEAWAYS OF THE EMPIRE: Notes on the Geography of Transport. By A. J. Sargent, M. A., Professor of Commerce in the University of London. London: A. & C. Black, Ltd.

SOLDIERS OF THE SEA: The Story of the United States Marine Corps. By Willis J. Abbot. Illustrated. New York: Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.50.

NAVAL HEROES OF TODAY. By Francis S. Collins. Illustrated with photographs. New York: The Century Company. $1.50.

IN the first year of the war Punch treated its readers to two or three essays in imitation of those prophetical writers whose task it was to keep ordinary readers informed of the true significance of events on land and sea, to expound in terms adapted to their meaner understanding the deep and intricate mysteries of military and naval science. One victim of these good-natured burlesques was Mr. Archibald Hurd, and what the parodist undertook in this instance was to show how many words might conveniently be used in expounding and insisting on the obvious. Mr. Hurd is a fluent and prolific writer and at times he may seem at needless pains to demonstrate truths that no thinking being could reasonably dispute; yet if he is apparently too insistent on platitude, if he is occasionally overearnest in proving that two and two make four, may it not be because he knows that in naval affairs the public is inclined to insist that two and two ought to make five?

"The public," said a distinguished sea officer in commenting upon the popular grumbling occasioned by the Battle of Jutland, "never did and never will understand naval warfare." It is to this circumstance that we may attribute the disappointment commonly felt, and indeed expressed by many, at the work of the fleets during the greater part of the war. The general understanding of land warfare is perhaps not much more profound in essence, but the results on land are more spectacular and usually more obvious, whereas at sea that "unremittent, daily silent pressure" that Mahan spoke of is hidden from the uninitiated. They are to be satisfied with nothing short of a Trafalgar or a Quiberon Bay.

It is precisely because Mr. Hurd is capable of dealing with the commonplaces of naval warfare that his work is valuable, and if he is capable of dealing with them it is because he knows his naval history and has understood it better than some more noisy and pretentious critics. His review of the work of the British fleet is not essentially controversial, though it touches on many points that have been and still are debated with warmth, from the Jutland affair to questions of a more abstract kind, such as freedom of the seas. It is above all an attempt to give the reader a true idea of the function of fleets in general, and especially of the achievement of the British fleet in the great war. In this he has succeeded admirably, showing with a wealth of illustrations from history how extraordinary the achievement was. It may be recalled that in the early disappointments of the war on land the late Admiral Mahan always refused to be unduly depressed, for "in any case," as he wrote to one of his English correspondents, "the British fleet holds the decision in its hands, as in the days of Napoleon." Though writing before the conclusion of the armistice, Mr. Hurd is fully justified in saying that without a Trafalgar it had, in fact, "achieved in less than four years more than the British Navy of a hundred years or so ago accomplished in twenty years."

Professor Sargent's little book is based on a series of lectures designed to clear the ground for a systematic consideration of one of the most important problems of reorganization after the war. He deals particularly with British interests, but his exposition is none the less useful for general purposes since the main points discussed are in essence applicable to all countries engaged in shipping. Though written during the war, the book does not touch the extraordinary conditions then prevailing, but is founded on "those ultimate geographic facts on which the interchange of commerce depends"—radical facts which cannot be permanently modified even by the greatest of wars. Nor does the author undertake to propose policies for the future, his aim being rather to lay before the reader certain fundamental truths upon which all thoughts concerning the future must necessarily be based. The problems of transport by sea are highly complex, so complex that most of the speculation we hear today is utterly idle and worthless. As an aid to clear thinking on this weighty subject Professor Sargent's book is of manifest value.

Though "Soldiers of the Sea" is described in a prefatory note by Major T. G. Sterrett as "an important addition to the military history of our country," Mr. Abbot himself would hardly make so bold a claim for recognition. He has indeed been at some pains to compile a clear and consecutive story of the marines from the military annals of the country, but his main purpose has evidently been to provide a lively and picturesque narrative of heroic deeds, from the earliest days to the days of Château-Thierry and Belleau Wood. And a stirring story he has made of it. If in the earlier passages it has not always been possible to determine the precise part played by the marines, the author was nevertheless justified in dealing with various notable events at sea, on the sound principle that "there was glory enough for all, and we may be sure the marines earned their share." As to later times, the story of deeds in the European war will obviously deserve amplification in a second edition. Altogether a thoroughly readable book, and well illustrated with appropriate photographs.

Mr. Collins had good material for his book, but it suffers from a sustained high-tension of style. The truth probably is that he had not enough precise information, and the result is a deplorable amount of padding and too much rhapsody. There is, besides, a great deal of misinformation in the book. The transporting of our armies to Europe was by no means, as he implies, a single-handed feat of our navy. Nor is it true that "from the first no one doubted the ability of the American sailor to down the German submarine." Of the vessels engaged in this work we have the assurance of Admiral Sims himself that not more than 4 per cent. were American. But in everything Mr. Collins is governed by the motto "America First," and he applies this without discrimination. "The American Navy was the first to recognize the possibilities of aircraft. * * * The first naval appropriation for aeronautics in history was made by Congress in 1911." If Mr. Collins will turn back to the British Navy estimates of 1909-10 he will find that provision was made in them for work in connection with aerial navigation and that an Aeronautical Branch was already established at that time. When the story of our navy in the war comes to be written it is to be hoped that it will be undertaken by a more judicious hand.

PUSHING WATER

PUSHING WATER. By Eric P. Dawson, Lieutenant, R. N. V. R. New York: John Lane Company. $1.

LIEUTENANT ERIC DAWSON of the Royal Navy is the brother of Lieutenant Coningsby Dawson of the British Army, and he is an officer, not on a splendid big dreadnought, but on a little auxiliary patrol of the "Mosquito Fleet." His book is a collection of letters written on board ship, in the discomforts of that very cramped existence—and a cheerful, interesting, illuminating book it is. We know little of the life of this part of the navy—our own or Great Britain's—and this young officer's pictures of it are absorbing and informative reading indeed.

The ships of the Auxiliary Motor Boat Patrol (the official name of that branch of the service) are familiarly known by various names, but the one the men themselves prefer is "movies." They are built, says Lieutenant Dawson, "for speed, not comfort"—eighty feet of match boarding shaped like a razor, with an engine room taking up one-third of the space and four huge tanks to contain fuel for a long patrol does not, he explains, leave much space for anything else. The boats are built in this country, and the writer adds:

> After all they are typical of the very spirit and enterprise of America. They are lean and sharpcut as the American himself, and like the American type of manhood just a shell to contain an almost inexhaustible supply of energy.

Eric Dawson himself intended to join the Canadian Artillery, but when he heard of the work of the Mosquito Fleet, hunting submarines, he changed his mind; hunting submarines was a thrilling sport. He says:

> I think this branch of service made its appeal to the sporting sense of many of the R. N. V. R. officers, and gathered in a particular kind of man, whose joy was bucking up against things that required his own initiative to win through. Especially is this true of the Colonials—we have many Canadians and New Zealanders. * * *
> For each and every one of us, whether the year of our Lord 1914 saw us moving freely in the green spaces of the earth, or wearing the elbows out of broadcloth jackets in stuffy offices, the fabric of our lives will be re-woven. I think the rolling stone and adventure-seeker will have had his appetite sated and will go back with a calmer spirit to gather up the threads of his scattered life;

Deer Godchild

By Edith Serrell and Marguerite Bernard

Anyone who opens this and reads the letters of James Prendergast Jackson, Jr., of Greenville Falls, age 11 years, to the secretary of the Junior Committee of the Fatherless Children of France, will continue, with chuckles, through said James Jackson's correspondence with his deer godchild, Andree Leblanc. The delightful letters between this Yankee boy and the little French girl are the great thing,—they are uproariously funny, but there is more in them than fun:—there is an element of pathos, too.

but the man who strolled into his place of business, immaculate every morning for three hundred-odd days of the year at the same tick of the clock, will have found that the iron of unrest has entered his being, and the longing for the open spaces, the horizon and the elemental things, will be always with him.

There will be few of us, when this war is over, who will not have lost the fear of the little things of life; the daily fear of the things that may be, that sometimes happen but most usually don't, will no longer burden us,

Most of the men in this service, Lieutenant Dawson points out, had been civilians until the war made them naval volunteers. We have got used to the idea of a civilian army, he says, but not many people realize how large a part of the work of the navy during the war was done by civilians too. A great portion of the "Fringes of the Fleet" at least, he adds, has been armed by civilians. And in "Pushing Water" he tells how, in their cramped and uncomfortable quarters, they suffered from seasickness!

We are told of the work of hunting submarines, patrolling the coasts, and policing the seas as special constables. The writer continues:

> Of all our "stunts" perhaps the most pathetic is when we assume the rôle of stretcher-bearer to the navy and go in search of the sailors in "open boats." "Steamer torpedoed 20 miles W. S. W. of X. Head" comes the order.
> Then the movie's engines hum as never before, and her exhausts wreathe her in a fleece-cloud of vapor. It's a question of life and death, and nothing matters but speed. * * *

Lieutenant Dawson's book is vividly and modestly written, an interesting addition to the library that tells first hand of the winning of the war.

BEYOND LIFE

BEYOND LIFE. By James Branch Cabell. New York: Robert M. McBride Company. $1.50.

THERE is something so intriguingly winning, one might say wooing, about Mr. Cabell's style that even a realist, if not entirely desiccated and aesthetically atrophied, will find himself yielding to the cunning of his sentences. Mr. Cabell's various misreadings of literary and actual history need not impair a sensitive person's enjoyment of his delightful style, as shown in these essays, any more than a knowledge of elementary biology need impair such a one's enjoyment of the quaint speculations of Sir Thomas Browne respecting the presence of joints in elephants. And speaking of Sir Thomas reminds one that Mr. Cabell would probably say that when the author of "Religio Medici" assumed that elephants had no joints he was merely fulfilling a romantic function, the function of the demiurge, namely, considering elephants not as they are but "as they ought to be." This, for Mr. Cabell, is the function of all art. "For every art," he says, "is a confession of faith in that which is not yet." So he reads into all classic and mediaeval literature that dealt with witches and gods and fantastic and impossible destinies a romantic impulse, a desire to escape reality for the ideal. But he forgets that when you really believe in witches and gods and fantastic and impossible destinies you are not escaping reality when you expound them, you are merely depicting it. He himself says, speaking of Marlowe's "Faustus" in the splendid essay, "The Economist":

> The story told of a bargain which Marlowe believed was capable of consummation, by such "forward wits," at the very moment Marlowe wrote: and he no more questioned that as a result of this bargain Johan Faustus, after doing certain unusual things, was carried off alive to hell than you or I would think of denying that Napoleon, after doing certain unusual things, was carried off alive to St. Helena.

This somewhat invalidates Mr. Cabell's interpretation. A mediaevalist writing about gods is no more a romantic than a New York novelist writing about the subway.

But all this "realistic" quibbling may be thought quite irrelevant. What is relevant is that Mr. Cabell writes like this:

> For we admire our corner of the planet, we prize our span of life, and we cherish our bodies with a certain tenderness. It is not the part of a well-balanced person, say we, to think of such "economy," not to appraise a man's relative importance in human life, far less in the material universe, after any such high-flown and morbid fashion, so long as there is the daily paper with all the local news. So we take refuge in that dynamic illusion known as common sense; and wax sagacious over slate elections and the children's progress at school and the misdemeanors of the cook, and other trivialities which accident places so near the eye that they seem large; and we care not a button that all about us flows and gyrates unceasingly, an endless and inconceivable jumble of rotatory blazing gas and frozen spheres and detonating comets, where through spins Earth like a frail midge. And we decline, very emphatically, to consider the universe as a whole—"to encounter Pan," as the old Greeks phrased it, who rumored that this thing sometimes befell a mortal, but asserted likewise that the man was afterward insane. They seem to have had the root of the matter.

Mr. Cabell pleads for romanticism as Wilde does in "The Decay of Lying." He is disenchanted and unhopeful when he says that "man is the only animal who can not profit by knowing the truth about himself." Frankly he seeks an ivory tower to hide him from a monotonous spectacle devoid of savor. But he is never bitter; rather the contrary, with a sly and delightful humor. Indeed, his book approaches the ideal desired by the imaginary John Charteris from whom these essays are supposedly derived; it exemplifies the "auctorial virtues of distinction and clarity, of beauty and symmetry, of tenderness and urbanity." Charteris included truth in this chaplet. Why, when his philosophy counsels an escape from it?

HOW TO SING A SONG

HOW TO SING A SONG: or, The Art of Dramatic and Lyric Interpretation, by Yvette Guilbert. With introduction by Clayton Hamilton, and many illustrations. The Macmillan Company, New York. $2.

MME. GUILBERT says that Gounod told her often, "Mademoiselle Yvette, for God's sake do not take singing lessons. A 'pretty voice' will be one of thousands. You have created your style—preserve it." Verdi also, on one of his last visits to Paris, came to her house, and Guilbert asked him why he wrote the supper scene in "La Traviata" as a waltz. "You see," replied Verdi, "if we had on the operatic stage singers of songs, such as you are, we would write music appropriate to the words; but we have only more or less beautiful voices for arias, and we write music for arias, arias to make shine the soprano, the contralto, tenor, and the rest."

Your singer of a song, says the French artist herself, should be able to sing with the voice of a child, the voice of a boy, of a girl, of a young man, of an old man, of a brutal man, of a sweet woman, of a priest, of a soldier. "His voice should have all the 'colors' necessary to express all human feelings, all the thousand shades of emotions, of human joys, sorrows, perplexity, all the colors necessary to illuminate the words of a text." She quotes elsewhere, on "The Comic Spirit," a remark of Henri Rochefort, as to herself, "Glory to Yvette Guilbert, who found a way to make the English laugh."

The book is intimately personal, and the words of French poems are those Mme. Guilbert has sung and recited in America. No one who heard her read Lafontaine can miss a perfect likeness to her style as reproduced in dots and dashes, that give, as it were, her grimaces and gestures of "Maître Corbeau" and "Maître Renard." There are life photographs of Yvette in all expressions from a baby smile to an extra-fearful face naïvely described as "raging rage," and there are drawings of pose and costume, airs and graces in black and white, multum in parvo, for the book indeed is little, but great is Guilbert.

A FAMOUS COOK BOOK

THE BOSTON COOKING-SCHOOL COOK BOOK: Revised Edition, with Additional Chapters on the Cold Pack Method of Canning, on the Drying of Fruits and Vegetables, and on Food Values. By Fannie Merritt Farmer. With over 133 half-tone illustrations. Boston: Little, Brown & Co. $2.

This new edition of the famous cook book of the Boston Cooking School was prepared with the thought of war-time needs in mind. But that—even aside from the request to "keep on saving food"—it is of permanent value goes without saying. In peace time, too, we shall find our new knowledge of food values important, and shall rejoice to find them in Miss Farmer's book. And it is not for nothing that we have learned new things on the canning and drying of fruits and vegetables. The new edition of "The Boston Cooking School Cook Book" is to be welcomed, for peace as well as for war, by housewives, inexperienced and expert. It is, indeed, a compendium of household knowledge, a complete book of the modern kitchen.

The book contains a chapter of hints for young housewives, and another on suitable food combinations, also a collection of special wheat-saving recipes.

DUTTON'S New Novels Now Ready

New Edition with Introduction by WILLIAM DEAN HOWELLS
The tragedy of this story by the author of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" lies in the experience of its hero who, preaching revolt against the stifling authority of church and state, finds that instead of making free men he has only removed the sense of restraint which kept them from becoming criminals. In view of certain aspects of the Russian revolution, the book is not only an interesting novel but a timely human document. Net, $1.90

The Challenge to Sirius By Sheila Kaye-Smith
A deeply significant study of the forces that shaped a man's life, gulding him from a quiet Sussex village, through America's Civil War, into the forests of Yucatan and back again to Sussex. There is a touch of quiet power in it that is exceptional. Net, $1.90

The Crescent Moon By F. Brett Young
A romance of devotion and treachery, ambition and expiation, laid in one of the lone outposts of white civilization in the jungles of East Africa. There is a touch of mystery about it, and the charm of an unusual love story. Net, $1.75

The Highwayman By H. C. Bailey
As gallant a romance of conspiracy, misunderstanding and high-hearted love as ever made crowns and kingdoms seem of minor worth. Net, $1.60

BURKE STONE, Inc.
Hotel Gramatan Arcade
Bronxville, N. Y.
January 24, 1919.

The New York Times:

On Sunday, January 12, we inserted an advertisement in the Real Estate Section of The New York Times, describing a seven room house for sale.

The results exceeded our fondest anticipation. We had numerous replies within the first two days and succeeded in disposing of the house on the third day after the advertisement appeared.

This letter expresses our appreciation of the value of The Times as an advertising medium for real estate.

SALESMEN.
Exceptional opportunity for few ambitious men who want to get into big field, with a real future assured for those who make good.
World's largest and best-known manufacturing concern in its line is reorganizing its national selling organization and will make places in New York for men of good calibre and first-class appearance who prove after fair trial that they can sell a high-grade office device.
Promotions strictly on merit and results. Drawing account of $15 to $25 weekly and liberal bonus will make earnings of $50 to $75 fairly certain during first year while learning.
Don't apply unless your references are the highest and your past record clean in every way. Previous selling experience not essential if you have the push, personality and perseverance to stick and succeed. Give full particulars, with your address and telephone number. Office Appliance, W 719 Times Downtown.

SALESMAN.
Assuming:
That I can show you the best and most efficient office device of its kind on the market today, irrespective of price;
That it is the lowest in price of all competitors;
That it is a necessity;
That it is marketed by a manufacturer of international reputation and high financial standing;
That it is now backed by full page advertisements in the leading national weeklies;
What do you think YOU could do with this combination?
I cannot afford to waste any time with would-be's, but if you've got red blood in your veins, and are a regular "he" specialty salesman, I wish to see you.
Strictly commission basis.

SALESMEN.
We want three men, over 25 years of age, who are salesmen and know it;
Who are gentlemen and can prove it;
Who are frankly looking for opportunity to make good in a big way with a house which will help them do it.
Our firm is expanding.
Its business is of world importance.
The men we seek must be clean as to record and habits, strong as to character and determination.
We will train them for executive position in a financial organization which has grown great because it recognizes ability and rewards conscientious effort with prompt promotion. Compensation commission basis.
Experience in our line is unnecessary.
Tell us who and what you are, and give telephone number, so that interview may be arranged.

SALESMEN—AMBITIOUS SALESMEN ABSORB THIS.
A year ago I resigned as sales manager of the largest automobile distributer in the country; mine was a responsible and lucrative position, but I wanted to increase my earning capacity; I had reached the top of the ladder; looked over the business field with a fine comb and rejected innumerable propositions; at last I hit on the greatest business in the world, LIFE INSURANCE, which had been presented to me many times before, but never until I tried the business did I realize the following: A delightful business, calling on the highest type of business and professional men, offering them a commodity of the most unquestionable character; every day doing some good for my fellow men and at the same time building and enjoying an income far beyond my fondest hopes. Your compensation, based upon commission, will be limited only by your own intelligent application. You ambitious salesmen, come in and let's have a talk and let me thoroughly prove my statements to you. If you are in the 20s or 40s, have demonstrated your ability in your present position; if you are making $3,500 or upward, and are eager to double, yes, treble your present income, will you hold yourself open and permit me to prove that I have the very opportunity you have been waiting for? Call and see my sales manager, Mr. Taylor, between 1 and 2 and 4:30 and 5:30 o'clock, 902, 516 5th Av.

FREE BOOK OF FLORIDA FACTS.—If interested in Florida, before visiting or settling in this wonderful State of fragrant flowers and sunshine, write Lake County Land Owners' Association, No. 199 Lloyd St., Fruitland Park, Florida, for free book of actual photographs and real conservative facts concerning this State. There is poor, good, better, and best land in Florida. This book will teach you what IS BEST and WHY. The members of the association are not land agents; they simply wish to tell actual facts to those really interested in the State. They have no time to waste on curiosity seekers, children, or people who expect to grow rich without effort, but to those of character, energy, some capital, with a desire to learn more of the opportunities in this most prosperous State, we would be glad to give fullest nformation.

SAYS AIRPLANES CAN CROSS ATLANTIC

PRESENTS MANY PROBLEMS

Suggests $1,000 for a Passenger and $1.25 Per Ounce for Mail as Reasonable Charges.

Special Correspondence of THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Dec. 15.—Flights across the Atlantic are perfectly possible, but it will be a long time yet before anything like a trans-Atlantic service can be set up. This is the opinion expressed today to the correspondent of THE NEW YORK TIMES by F. Handley-Page, the engineer whose ingenuity revolutionized flying and produced the great machines, which would have visited Berlin if the armistice had been delayed only a few more days.

He received the correspondent at his great works at Cricklewood in the north of London. A long line of solidly built brick factory buildings and hangars stretches along one side of an aviation field, and at one end of them is the block of management offices. Mr. Handley-Page is still a young man. Tall and dark, he receives his visitors with a frank welcome that puts them at ease at once. He is a man of many affairs and a multitude of business interests, but he has not yet acquired the brusqueness that marks so many men who have attained as much authority as he has in their own special lines.

"When will you fly across the Atlantic?" the correspondent asked.

"Just as soon as the Air Board permits," he replied at once.

"From London to New York?"

"Oh, no. When people talk about flying across the Atlantic they usually mean from Ireland to Newfoundland. That is 1,880 miles, and my new machines can do 2,700 miles, so that we should be able to do it easily."

"But no one wants to land in Newfoundland."

"A good deal better to land there than in the sea," Mr. Handley-Page remarked dryly.

"As a matter of fact, going by Newfoundland would mean making the flight to New York in two stages, but it is one thing to accomplish such an adventure on special occasions and quite another to set up any kind of a regular service. Sanguine as Mr. Handley-Page is regarding the practicability of flying across the ocean, he knows far too much about the risks of aviation to talk wildly about setting up an air ferry in the near future.

"There is a tremendous lot for us to learn before we think of that," he said. "We must investigate the meteorological conditions; we must develop new and highly efficient instruments; we must test our machines and learn whether they will stand the prolonged strain. We have not done a thousand-mile flight yet, and it will take a long time to find out all the problems we must face and how to solve them."

Trouble With Cross Winds.

The kind of difficulty that transatlantic fliers must face was illustrated by Mr. Handley-Page by explaining the trouble that cross winds might cause. An airplane, he explained, was affected by the air through which it moved and was retarded or accelerated according as that air was moving in the contrary or in the same direction as itself. But if the air moved athwart its course for a long period, the aviator would find that he had been carried far out of his course and would need delicate instruments to enable him to discover his position and how to correct it. At present we know very little about mid-Atlantic meteorological conditions, and it will take months of experience to gather the information needed for the establishment of a regular transatlantic service and then to adapt our machines to it.

Asked as to the kind of service he thought might ultimately be set up, Mr. Handley-Page said that with the airplanes averaging ninety miles an hour the flight from London to New York should take two days, a break being made at Newfoundland. It would not be a cheap service, as so much petrol would have to be carried. But, making a rough estimate, he thought that it would be possible to carry letters at the rate of $1.25 an ounce and a limited number of passengers at $1,000 each. The accommodation, of course, would be nothing like as luxurious as on one of the crack steamship liners. He remarked, however, that before anything of the kind could be done successfully it would be necessary to train the public up to the idea.

"Inventors," he said, "are always ahead of the public in their ideas and most of the inventions we have already made are not made full use of. Take the telephone for example; it is not used nearly as much as it should be. Every house ought to be on the telephone but they are not, merely because the public will not keep abreast of scientific invention. So we shall have to educate the ordinary man to make proper use of the airplane before it can be fully developed."

All kinds of schemes for the use of the airplane in Europe have been put forth since the armistice was signed. With thousands of experienced pilots soon to be released from military service, with unlimited possibilities of wealth before the man who succeeds in establishing really practical air ferries between the Continent and England, there is no wonder that promoters of all descriptions have taken up the idea and are trying to work out regular aviation services.

Routes have been surveyed, suggestions for the establishment of landing grounds every few miles or so have been put forward, and dozens of newspaper paragraphs have appeared putting the most rosy hue on one scheme or the other. It is even said that, to relieve the inevitable pressure on the telegraph wires, when dozens of newspaper scribes are writing up the Peace Conference at Paris, the English newspapers will arrange to have their stories forwarded to London by aerial post.

Commercial Flying in Europe.

Asked about these promises and hopes, Mr Handley-Page said he considered that he saw more prospect of advance in aviation from the development of commercial flying in Europe than from any attempt to fly across the Atlantic, but there were a number of very important matters to be considered and decided before much could be done even in Europe.

"We have," he said, "to settle the entire status of the aviator. We have to consider his relation to the State, and we must take account of such matters as the need of preventing smuggling and of observing such regulations as each community may impose.

"When I go to France I have no right to walk along the road, and I am able to do it only because the French Government permits it. So it is quite wrong to suppose that I have an inherent right to fly over French territory. If I am allowed to do so it will be only in accord with the regulations that the French authorities lay down, and these have not yet even been thought out, much less laid down."

There is a great deal of difference in the ideas of one country and another on matters which aviation will affect. Thus, as Mr. Handley-Page pointed out, while the British theory of land ownership regards the landowner as having rights from the centre of the earth to the very heavens above his property, in France land ownership covers merely property rights in the surface of the earth. In the same way national ideas and customs will vary on many other points in which the aviator will be interested.

Then, at the present moment, the political conditions of Europe are not such as to promise much eagerness on the part of the Governments to see aviation developed very greatly by private persons.

"As long as there is any trouble feared from Bolshevism, I don't expect," said Mr. Handley-Page, "that the Governments will welcome a great development of flying. It will be much more difficult to control travel from one country to another when aviation is common."

"They can always control the manufacture of airplanes," it was suggested.

"But they can't control the use of airplanes once they have been sold," was the answer.

Meanwhile Mr. Handley-Page would welcome a great development of flying within the United States. "There are vast continental areas over which the problems of constant extended flight can be studied. There, too, is a people divided into many different States, but with one common outlook upon the practical problems of life. Consequently, in the United States it will be possible to work out not only the technical problems of flying, but to develop the regulations and conventions that the commercial aviator must observe."

"After that has been done," said Mr. Handley-Page, "I have no doubt we shall have regular transatlantic air services. When I think of the necessities of two great centres of population like America and England, and when I remember how improving the speed and means of communication has always increased the need for more and still quicker transit, I am convinced there is a gold mine in it. But it is not yet a practical proposition, and there are years of preliminary work to be done before there can be regular, constant travel by air between New York and London."

URGE SHIP CANAL.

Brooklyn Residents Show the Need of Inland Waterway.

Nearly 500 residents and property owners in various sections of Brooklyn attended a mass meeting last week at Stauch's, Coney Island, to protest the substitution of a "draining ditch," considered a menace to health and property, for the legalized ship canal which was to provide an inland waterway from Gravesend Bay to Sheepshead and Jamaica Bays. The meeting resulted from the recent refusal of the Sinking Fund Commissioners to approve the plans for the creation of a ship canal, as presented by Dock Commissioner Murray Hulbert, in compliance with the Sutherland law, and attempt to put through the construction of the drainage ditch at the expense of the taxpayers.

Senator Sutherland, author of the Ship Canal bill; Congressman Cleary, Commissioner Meyer of the Dock Department, representing Commissioner Hulbert, and William S. Pickard, President of the New York Harbor and Long Island and Connecting Canal Association, under whose auspices the meeting was held, were among the speakers who urged concerted action in support of the canal project. The Canal Association adopted resolutions demanding approval of these or suitably revised plans, with a stipulation that in the event of the failure of the city officials to give their consent, a committee shall be appointed to draft a bill authorizing the Dock Commissioner or State engineer to proceed with plans for the waterway without the approval of Sinking Fund Commissioners.

The following organizations were represented at the meeting and supported the resolutions of Mr. Pickard's association: Coney Island Board of Trade, Sheepshead Bay Board of Trade, Van Sicklen Board of Trade, Homecrest Board of Trade, Gravesend Bay Board of Trade, West End Board of Trade, Bath Beach Taxpayers' Association, and the Civic Alliance of Coney Island.

IMPORTANT REALTY DECISION

Tenants Must Leave Premises Vacated in Good Condition.

The Appellate Division of the Supreme Court recently reversed a ruling of the lower court and upheld a covenant of a lease in which it was stated that a tenant when vacating premises which had been occupied under lease must leave the premises in as good a state as reasonable use and wear will permit.

The decision stated in part: "The weight of evidence clearly established much greater damage than testified to by defendants and defendants' witness; but even defendants' own proof as to the condition of the premises which surrendered to the landlord showed a breach of defendants' covenants 'to make at his own cost and expense all such repairs as shall be necessary to preserve the said premises in good order and condition and to make good all glass broken,' and to 'surrender the premises and everything belonging to or connected therewith in as good state and condition as reasonable use and wear thereof will permit.' On this proof plaintiff was entitled to judgment in some amount."

Another interesting problem involved in the case was whether the person who entered into possession of premises prior to the time of the lease should pay rent if there is no express agreement that he was to get free rent. The Supreme Court held that the defendants, having failed to prove an express covenant for the free use and occupation of the premises prior to the beginning of the lease, they became liable for the reasonable value of the use and occupation of the premises during that period.

Five Per Cent. Mortgage.

The Dry Dock Savings Bank has agreed to make a loan of $600,000 to the Hungerford Company on its building at 80 Lafayette Street. The loan was placed at 5 per cent. through William A. White & Sons.

This is the second large loan made by the Dry Dock Savings Bank at this rate of interest in the last few months. The $700,000 borrowed by the National City Company on the property at 52 Wall Street was secured from this bank at the 5 per cent. rate and for five years.

Building on the Increase.

During December in 148 cities the total value of building permits officially reported to The American Contractor was $17,485,396. Although this was 38 per cent. less than the total value reported during December, 1917, the gain over November is significant.

The total value of building permits for 1918 is significant only as it indicates the decline in private construction due to war conditions. The total value of $414,796,903 for 1918 shows a loss of 39 per cent. over the total of $676,662,206 for 1917, and a loss of 114 per cent. over the total of $889,884,679 for 1916.

Fire Prevention.

The real problem in preventing fires is to secure the actual interest and cooperation of the individual property owner. It is he who largely determines the construction, the nature of the contents, the extent of protection, the state of repair, the management and the hundred details which enter into the fire hazard of any building. The very fact that the aid of the individual must be enlisted indicates that there is no royal road to the control of fire waste.—W. E. Ellison.

Pennsylvania Hotel Rental.

Rental of the Pennsylvania Hotel, which opened yesterday, payable to the Pennsylvania Railroad thirty days after the completion by the New York Hotel Statler Company, according to a lease recorded, is based on 5 per cent. of a valuation of $4,000,000; 6 per cent. of the cost of the structure, less reductions which have been allowed, and taxes and other levies which the city and State may place on the realty and building. The lease is for twenty-one years.

HOLD THEIR HELPERS BY THE GOLDEN RULE

JOINT INTEREST INCENTIVE

Elimination of Drudgery and Arousing Pride in the Output Are Winners of Good Will.

Keeping help on the farm in war or peace is just about the same sort of problem as keeping help anywhere else and requires about the same treatment. There are employers in New York who always have waiting lists of good men and others in the same line who are always looking for men, and so it is on the farms of the country.

In view of the scarcity of farm labor and the great demand that is expected when it comes time to plant and harvest the world-feeding crop of 1919 the Government has been making firsthand investigations and inquiries in an effort to discover some formula that might be offered to all farmers and may be helpful to other employers. One of these investigators visited thirty-seven farms in Ohio and Indiana the owners of which had not lost a single helper during the war period, in spite of the bidding of munition factories and other activities. He found men who had worked on the same farms for ten, fifteen, and twenty years seemingly contented to stay on. In every case the investigator's report was practically the same—the "Golden Rule" had been applied.

The farmers who have kept their help have made life on the farm so livable that their workers were not lured away by the attractions of the city nor by high wages offered by other industries.

It is also notable that practically without exception the farmers who have little trouble in keeping the same help year in and year out are general farmers, growing live stock as well as raising grain. The live stock keeps the men busy when crops do not call for attention, and makes it profitable for the farmer to pay steady wages throughout the year.

Of course, there are two sides to the story. Not only is it shown that the farmer must do his part, but it is just as plain that the hired man has definite duties to perform. The reports emphasize that teamwork and pleasant relations on the farm mean real efficiency. Married workers, paid good living wages and supplied with a house, a garden, and other conveniences, seem to be the ideal helpers where the farmer himself can... conduct his own operations.

Here is a report from one of the farms visited by the Department of Agriculture investigator, and its principles are so generally applicable that any employer might study them profitably.

This is a 320-acre grain and stock farm in Madison County, Ind. The principal crops are corn, wheat, rye, and clover. This farmer hogs off from 30 to 40 acres of corn each fall, uses rye for fall, winter, and early spring pasture, pastures from 30 to 40 acres of clover each year with cattle and hogs, and feeds corn, corn silage, and clover hay, often buying grain from neighbors and purchasing hogs and cattle to feed.

He fattens about 200 hogs, buys two carloads of steers each year to put in his feed lot, and raises from eight to ten calves from stock and milk cows. His livestock operations are conducted so that there is a minimum of labor expended during the busy season and so that profitable employment is furnished for labor during the Winter months.

His buildings are centrally located and handy to the fields. The silo and arrangement of lots and sheds eliminate steps in feeding and caring for stock.

Windmills and gasoline engines furnish power for pumping, wood-sawing, grinding, and other chores. An acetylene plant is used for lighting. By using a tractor this man figures he supplants from three to four horses. Both the farmer and his hired man operate the tractor successfully. He keeps twelve draft horses and raises two or three colts each year.

Work on this farm is planned to increase the work done by one man and to eliminate horse power if possible. Such tools as the hay loader, tandem disk, two-row cultivator, gang plow, sulkies, big harrows and rollers, eight-foot binder, seven-foot mower, and manure spreader are in the equipment. This farmer also has lightened the work of his wife by installing a furnace, cement walks, running water for kitchen and bath, gas for lighting and cooking, and a power washing machine.

His present hand, who has been with him four years, is a married man and is furnished a good four-room house. The wage is $25 a month straight time the year round. In addition the hand receives one-fourth acre for garden and truck, all the chickens he cares to raise, feed for one cow and one horse, 400 pounds of hogs, and all the fruit and potatoes he needs for his family's use from the farm orchard and a common potato patch. The farmer gives his man $50 each Christmas.

When asked how he seemed to be able to hold help so well this farmer said:

"We have never had a word or fuss. I find my hands thoroughly reliable at all times. My helpers never have trouble as long as they work steadily and carry their share of the load. Good living conditions and good teams and tools help in making satisfied help. One must take pride in his farm and put this same spirit into the man. Keep him employed at all times and cut out drudgery where possible."

Extra help is employed to the equivalent of a man for two months. Such hands are being paid at the rate of $2 to $3 a day and are boarded by the farmer. They must make a place for themselves in the home and in the community and are treated as one of the family. This extra help is recruited in small towns and the neighborhood. The neighbors cooperate well in threshing, silo filling, shredding, harvest, clover hulling, and other work.

Here is the report on a 160-acre stock and grain farm near a town of 4,000 people in Preble County, Ohio. The main crops are corn, wheat, and clover.

The farmer pastures 30 acres of clover and eight acres of blue grass with cattle and hogs. He hogs off from eight to 20 acres of corn. He also pastures some hogs on the alfalfa, besides making hay.

Three carloads of fat hogs are marketed each year. Self-feeders have proved their worth in pork production and have been found great labor savers. About one-half carload of cattle are fed during the winter months.

There are eight work horses on this farm, all of which are of the draft type.

Among big tools found here are the manure spreader, tandem disk, two-row corn plow, sulky plow, seven-foot binder and six-foot mower. A gas engine, wind pump, and electric motor power take care of the water supply. The modern home, recently built, is equipped with a furnace, running water in kitchen and bath, electric lights and iron, washer, and cleaner. An oil stove is used in the kitchen.

The buildings are in the central group. Stock can be turned into eight acres of blue grass from the barn lot. This is handy and saves time in the morning in getting up the horses and cows.

The hand on this farm was a single man till last year. He had worked for this farmer three years up to that time. The old house was remodeled and he and the bride moved in. The house has six rooms. This hand gets $32.50 a month the year round, one-half acre for garden and truck, 300 pounds of pork on foot, all the chickens he cares to raise, is furnished with a cow, his horse is fed, he gets fuel wood, fruit, and gifts throughout the year to a total value of $15 to $20. This hand is a Virginian who is making good on this Ohio farm. The city industries and the draft made it cost more to get good help, but this farmer thought the farmers in his locality would get along. The neighbors cooperate well at threshing and other work. The hand's wife helps the farmer's wife when she is needed.

BUSINESS COMING IN VARICK STREET

NEWLY PAVED WITH GRANITE

Connection with Seventh Avenue Opens Up New Area for Industrial Building.

One of the ancient thoroughfares on Manhattan Island which soon must be reckoned with as a most important commercial artery is Varick Street. Of worthy antecedents and bearing the honored name of a patriot who fought for the liberties of his country and who was Mayor of New York for ten years, Varick Street has, of late, been more interesting to the observer of oddities in the lower Greenwich Village district than it has to the citizen of modern progressive tendencies. The old Varick Street, however, has passed away and those who wish to see some of the remaining vestiges of its simpler and quieter days would do well to walk down its expansive breadth, for indications all point to a remarkable transformation in the near future.

Three things have contributed to this change: first, its widening and connection with Seventh Avenue by the cutting through of the blocks north of Carmine Street to the avenue where it formerly ended at Greenwich Avenue and Eleventh Street; second, the construction of the subway beneath this widened surface, and third, the new granite pavement which has recently been completed.

All the way from its beginning at the junction of West Broadway and Franklin Street to Carmine Street, Varick Street is a splendid 100-foot thoroughfare which is destined to be equally as important to the commercial interests of the lower west side as Lafayette Street has become, since its improvement, to the east side of the city. Within a few years a new avenue has been created in one of the growing commercial sections of the city. Its new granite pavement, which is one of the best jobs of that kind done by the office of Borough President Dowling since the latter assumed office, cost over $220,000, the largest single paving contract authorized in the paving schedule a year ago. The Seventh Avenue extension above Carmine Street connecting the two thoroughfares, and now giving a broad continuous avenue for heavy traffic from the lower part of the city far to the north, is still in the hands of the pavers. Sections are completed, but early in the Spring when the work is finished west side business will be able to use this new highway without interruption.

To make Varick Street a 100-foot thoroughfare, thirty feet was added on its easterly side, which meant the sacrifice of all the old houses there. The most important demolition which this necessitated was St. John's Chapel, now practically razed and whose large site, between Beach and Laight Streets, has been placed on the market by Trinity Corporation for improvement with business structures. The work of destruction is clearly seen all the way north from Canal Street where there are stretches of several vacant block fronts with potent evidences of the slicing off process in old houses and tenements temporarily repaired. On the west side some of the early homes of seventy-five years ago remain, but in the great commercial changes soon to come it is reasonable to predict that these remnants of the lower Greenwich area will not survive for many years.

In addition to the large tract made available for improvement on the St. John's Chapel site, most of the vacant property in the northerly blocks is also owned by Trinity Corporation and is practically ready for immediate improvement. From Canal to Broome Street are three entire block fronts on the east side virtually destitute of buildings, all of which, with the exception of a few parcels in the block between Watts and Broome Streets, is owned by Trinity. The vacant block between Dominick and Spring Streets, adjoining the Spring Street Church and Varick House, is owned by interests affiliated with the institutional work of the church and is likely to be improved with an apartment house or home for workers in the near future.

From Spring to Houston Street are four more vacant block fronts, all owned by Trinity except a small plot at the northeast corner of Vandam Street. Like the St. John's site, these properties are all in the market for business structures. There are, therefore, seven block fronts on the street from Canal Street north awaiting improvement as soon as building conditions become normal and which will provide several thousand square feet of much needed space in that locality. All of these parcels will undoubtedly be utilized for eight to ten loft structures similar in character to those erected in the vicinity prior to the war and which were all rented on completion, most of them on long term leases.

There is a strong demand for warehouse and industrial business space in this area and negotiations are already pending by several large interests for improvement at the earliest possible date. Within the next two years a building revival is certain to appear which will rival and doubtless eclipse the active industrial building which wiped out so many old Greenwich Village houses in the half dozen years immediately preceding the European war.

The use of granite for the Varick Street pavement shows that the city authorities realized correctly the use to which that wide thoroughfare would be placed. It is natural that there should be objection from business and trucking interests to the segregated traffic law of the Police Commissioner that Seventh Avenue proper, from Eleventh Street north, should be limited to passenger vehicles. This edict may be modified, as, if carried out to the letter, it would create a decided hardship upon commercial vehicular traffic from Varick Street to the business area in the Thirties and Forties, if it were necessary to divert such traffic at the old Seventh Avenue end to a more westerly thoroughfare. Seventh Avenue from Eleventh Street north is now paved with asphalt or in process of such paving. The new asphalt paving over the subway cut is finished to Thirty-first Street, but the city engineers do not call it a very good job. Work on the upper section from Thirty-first Street to Times Square is expected to begin in the Spring. This change in the paving of the continuous thoroughfare was due to the hotel influence in the Pennsylvania Station zone, of which the most important will be the new Pennsylvania Hotel, nearing completion for opening early in the new year.

The subway has rendered the Varick Street area accessible as never before and its widening will relieve Hudson Street of a large part of the increased traffic due to the enormous development of a hitherto quiet section of the city into a prominent business centre. These elements of accessibility will also influence, although to a somewhat less extent, the building of small apartments and the alteration of houses into modern residential conditions in the upper area of old Greenwich, centring perhaps around Sheridan Square. Several blocks there are restricted to residence and the demand for homes has so far outstripped the supply that the realty agents have scores of applications on file.

Vincent C. Pepe, whose realty office has been instrumental in stimulating many improvements of this character, said yesterday:

"The demand for small apartments in this section, especially in the altered houses, is greater all the time. The supply is only about 40 per cent. of the demand. To meet the need, property owners, builders, and operators ought to get together and plan to alter houses on a great scale. At present the chief drawbacks are material, labor, and the mortgage market. Within the last year it has been difficult for any one to make even a small alteration, owing to the price of labor and material. The end of the war will, of course, materially improve the situation and I have no doubt that many improvements will be made before the close of this year."

The last alteration, which has just been completed, was at 18 and 20 Jones Street, two houses owned by the Greenwich Improvement Society. Before alteration they rented for $70 per month each. About three months ago it was decided to improve them at a cost of $7,000, providing steam heat, electricity, and plumbing. The results are $310 per month for each house and all the apartments were rented on long leases.

Tax Rate Hearing.

On Wednesday at 8 P. M. there will be a joint hearing by the Senate and Assembly Cities Committee on the Real Estate Board of New York's bill introduced by Assemblyman Sesselberg, amending the Greater New York Charter by prescribing limitations upon the rates of taxation upon real estate. The hearing will be held in the Assembly chamber, Albany.

WHEN NEW R.T. LINES WILL BE OPENED

Brooklyn's System Will Be Greatly Increased During the Present Year.

BRONX WILL ALSO BENEFIT

Rides on City's Lines Per Capita Grew from 353 to 358—The Growth in Population Was 94,827.

The general statement in the annual report of the Public Service Commission of the rapid transit lines to be opened during the current year has been made more valuable by later information giving approximate dates when the lines will be placed in operation. One of them, the subway part of the Pelham Bay Park branch of the Lexington Avenue subway between the station at Third Avenue and 138th Street, was opened to the public on the 7th inst.

The other lines, and the dates when they are expected to be in operating condition, are:

The new Culver elevated line in Brooklyn, about Feb. 20. This is dependent upon the strike of the carpenters, which is expected to be settled in about a week. Another few weeks will see the work completed and the line in public use.

Two new tunnel lines between Manhattan and Brooklyn will be finished late in the Summer or in the early Fall, possibly not later than during the first two weeks in September.

Connection between the Brighton Beach subway from Fulton and St. Felix Streets, Brooklyn, to Malbone Street and Flatbush Avenue, early in the Fall, or not later than early in October.

Eastern Parkway line in Brooklyn extending from the Atlantic Avenue terminus of the old subway, down Flatbush Avenue and out the Eastern Parkway as a subway to Buffalo Avenue, and thence as an elevated line over Livonia Avenue to New Lots Avenue, in the late Fall or early in the Winter.

Nostrand Avenue line in Brooklyn, extending through this avenue to Flatbush Avenue, will be ready for operation, it is hoped, late in the year or, at the worst, early in 1920.

Concerning two of the other lines the report of the commission says:

Extension of the Broadway subway north and east from Times Square. This work will be finished as far as Fifty-ninth Street within a few months, providing the Board of Estimate approves an agreement for the installation of tracks north of Times Square.

The easterly connection of this line through Fifty-ninth and Sixtieth Streets via tunnel to Queens. Arrangements are being made for track installation as far as the Queensboro Bridge Plaza elevated station. The work will possibly be completed before the end of the year.

Concerning the arrangements for the continuation of construction of the Webster Avenue extension of the Interborough's Third Avenue elevated railroad, the commission admits that it has no information upon which it can base an idea of the date of operation of this line. The commission takes care to explain that the progress of the work depends largely upon the operation of the Board of Estimate, which heretofore has not displayed any special disposition to co-operate.

During 1918 the city's railroads collected 1,975,482,316 fares, as against 1,918,812,226, an increase of 56,670,090, which was at the rate of 353 rides per capita in 1917 and 358 rides per capita in 1918. During 1918 the population of the city increased 94,827, according to the figures of the commission.

Efforts to handle the figures in such a way as to show the reduction of congestion per mile as the dual system progresses and is placed in operation will be made as soon as the system is completed. It will then be possible to show what lines have been the most useful in making travel more comfortable and will also show what direction a further extension of the rapid transit system should take. That the service is still far from satisfactory is proved by the fact that the commission received from citizens 1,755 complaints during the year concerning alleged faults in the transportation service.

Attention is called to the fact that development is always slower in those sections where the public utilities are the poorest in point of public accommodation. In 1918 the commission sought to improve the service of all public service corporations in the outlying sections.

To Advance Torrens Titles.

Asserting that the Torrens law, as amended, is making slow progress toward adoption because of the failure of the city to provide adequate machinery for the proper administration of the law, former Register John J. Hopper, Treasurer of the Torrens Title League, has submitted a proposal to the Board of Estimate that it increase the salaries of certain employés designated as official examiners of titles. Mr. Hopper, for the Title League, asks the board to establish a uniform salary of $3,000 for examiners in each county to compensate them for the extra highly technical work imposed upon them in addition to their other duties.

DOINGS AND SAYINGS IN THE REALTY WORLD

LATEST DEALINGS IN THE REALTY FIELD

PROPERTY HELD AT $325,000

Left Sale in Old Retail Shopping Zone—An Active Bronx and Suburban Market.

The fact that investors, both large and small, are slowly but surely coming back into the realty market and that trades which have predominated for many months past are being superseded by all-cash transactions were very evident in the sales of the last week.

Apartment houses which are now yielding a higher gross income on the investment than ever before in the history of the city are in good demand, and private dwellings that have long been without tenants are being remodeled and turned into good paying propositions. This is, of course, due to the fact that there has been no constructive work since 1917, but demand is so far ahead of supply that even when construction work does begin it will take several years to fill the gap that has been created.

An excellent example of the investment demand was shown yesterday in the sale of the seven-story apartment house occupying a plot 111 by 150 on the southwest corner of 111th Street and Seventh Avenue. This property, held at $325,000, was sold by Eliza Guggenheimer, widow of the late Randolph Guggenheimer, to an out-of-town investing client of Israel Cohen & Levy. The buyer paid all cash above the mortgage.

Sale in Old Retail Shopping Zone.

In the old retail shopping zone the Levitan Corporation purchased from a client of the Bankers Trust Company, 11 West Twentieth Street, a nine-story fireproof loft building on plot 28 feet 6 inches by 92 feet. The building is leased for about $14,000, and was purchased on a cash basis. Charles E. Moore was the broker.

Two Harlem Deals.

Charles E. Moore has resold for Morris Borsodi to the Levitan Corporation, 551 West 125th Street, a five-story double flat and store, on a lot 25 by 100. The building is fully rented for about $3,500.

Shaw & Co. sold 338 East 124th Street, a three-story and basement brownstone dwelling, on a lot 20 by 100. The purchaser will occupy.

The Bronx Market.

J. Clarence Davies has sold for Joseph Lapini, the two-story dwelling at 2,052 Ryer Avenue, 367 feet north of Burnside Avenue, on lot 16.8 by 98 feet.

The four-story flat at 1,389 Stebbins Avenue, on plot 40 by 100, has been sold by Isidor Kahn for Dr. Julius Bondy to an investor.

The two-family houses at 883 and 885 Faile Street, each on plot 25 by 100, have been sold by Williamson & Bryan for T. M. Macy.

Catharine L. Wynne sold the two houses, 516-518 Westchester Avenue, on a plot 54 by 137.5, which have been held by her for a number of years, to B. Meier & Sons, who will make extensive improvements on the property.

Brooklyn.

Harry M. Lewis sold for the Julius Strauss Realty Corporation the four-story brick apartment, on a lot 26 by 100, 383 Chauncey Street, to a client for investment.

The plot, 60 by 150 feet, with railroad siding, on the north side of Thirty-eighth Street, 320 feet east of Thirteenth Avenue, has been sold by the Realty Trust to the Standard Building Supply Company, which will erect sheds, &c., for the storing of building materials preparatory to the future development of that section.

The Alco Building Company, associated with the Realty Trust, has sold the two dwellings at 2,027 and 2,029 Sixty-sixth Street, in the Mapleton Park section, to John and Hugo Clement.

Meister Builders, Inc., have purchased from the Harry McKee Company the two-story business building at 1,854 Bath Avenue, between Bay Nineteenth and Bay Twentieth Streets, Bath Beach.

Bulkley & Horton Company sold the four-story business property at 37 Grant Square (Bedford Avenue and Bergen Street) for the Chester Drug Company to a client for investment.

Baffa & Dizon sold 146 Wilson Street, three story and basement brick dwelling, on a plot 20 by 100, for the F. Parr estate; also 95 Hewes Street, a three-story single brick flat; on a lot 22 by 100, for Philippine Beverle to an investor.

H. J. Storza sold for the Caigah Realty Company to a client for investment the three-story brick apartment house with stores, on lot 20 by 83, on the northeast corner of Tenth Avenue and Fifty-eighth Street.

Long Island.

New Jersey.

S. S. Walstrum-Gordon & Forman have sold for William J. Fullerton to Muster & Bauman, druggists, the three-story business and apartment building on West Ridgewood Avenue, Ridgewood. The purchasers have occupied the building as tenants for several years.

The Pruden farm at Florham Park, containing fifteen acres, a dwelling, and outbuildings, has been sold to George Perlow of Madison, through the agency of Joseph V. Keating.

Louis Schlesinger, Inc., has sold for Mrs. S. De Puy the brick residence at 39 Grant Street, corner Spring Street, Newark, to Charles Julian.

The Oak Hills Realty Company, a New Jersey corporation, purchased from the William H. Barkhorn Company the twenty-family apartment house situated at the northeast corner of Prospect Street and Park Avenue, known as 500 Park Avenue, East Orange, on a plot with a frontage of 120 feet on the avenue, and a depth of 205 feet. The consideration paid is understood to be $130,000. J. L. Feibleman & Co. negotiated the sale.

MORTGAGE OUTLOOK.

Savings Banks Lending More Readily, but Building Loans Scarce.

With the close of the war and gradually improved conditions in the realty market the mortgage situation is expected to reach a more favorable turn in the near future. Since August, 1914, the supply of money has been negligible. At times, up to April, 1917, there were considerable funds, although nothing approaching a normal amount. Since the entrance of the United States into the war there has been no market whatsoever except under unusual conditions.

"Savings banks are now becoming more active in the loan market," said Edwin C. Benedict of the Charles F. Noyes Company, yesterday, in discussing the situation. "The loss of deposits due to the Liberty bond flotations has been less than expected. The banks had fortified themselves to withstand greater withdrawals. Another important factor is the deposit of what is sometimes referred to as 'stocking money.' Thousands of people tucked away their savings, thinking cash in hand better than cash in bank. Now that the war has closed they are depositing their money in large amounts. The savings bank situation looks very encouraging. I think that legitimate requirements for conservative mortgage loans will be fully met from now on.

"One of the most encouraging signs of an early resumption is a loan of $700,000 at 5 per cent. made by a large savings bank on the property at 50 Wall Street, recently purchased by the National City Company. Several other fair loans have been made by savings banks at from 5 to 6 per cent. with 5½ per cent. generally asked for first-class loans.

"Life insurance companies, on the other hand, are not likely to be in the market for some time. They were heavy investors in Liberty bonds. In the fourth drive most of the companies made sufficiently large subscriptions to anticipate their investment funds for some time to come. It is not likely, therefore, with another drive promised for next Spring, that the insurance companies will be at all active in the market during 1919, although late in the year the situation may change.

"Building loan money will probably be very scarce. There is now a real demand for additional space of all kinds, office, loft, and residential, and space never was more fully occupied or in greater demand. Downtown merchants, shippers, and business people have been compelled to purchase quarters for their own occupancy. This very favorable renting and selling condition will probably continue, as the erection of new buildings will for a long period be prohibited by two factors—first, inability to finance; second, exceedingly high cost of material and labor."

MANAGERS ELECT OFFICERS.

Charles B. Best Unanimously Elected to Presidency.

At the annual meeting of the New York Building Managers Association, held last week at the Park Avenue Hotel, Charles B. Best, manager of the realty of the Van Buren and Spingler estates, was unanimously elected President. Mr. Best succeeds W. T. Ropes of Horace S. Ely & Co., who served as President for two years, succeeding the charter President, B. E. Martin. The latter, who resigned owing to illness, was made the first life member of the association.

Other officers elected were Clarence T. Coley of the Equitable Building Corporation, Vice President; J. Clydesdale Cushman of Cushman & Wakefield, Secretary, and Lee T. Smith of Pease & Elliman was re-elected Treasurer for the third term.

The Executive Committee chosen to serve three years comprises Everett A. Brett, S. F. Carstein, Guyon L. C. Earle, Charles A. Flynn, Bleecker Leggett, Robert R. Rainey, and W. T. Ropes.

A. C. Doty of Cleveland, Ohio, former President of the National Association of Building Owners and Managers, extended the invitation of President William Marshall Ellis to the local association to attend the forthcoming annual convention of the national association, which will be held in Philadelphia, June 10, 11, and 12.

Reports from twenty-two committees were read, indicating the activities and benefits deriving therefrom to members and the interests they represent. P. Everett Files of the Loton H. Slawson Company was elected to membership, which now numbers 108.

Site for War Arch.

As a site for the memorial arch proposed for those who have made the supreme sacrifice, the Art Committee of the Fifth Avenue Association, in a report to Rodman Wanamaker, Chairman of the Permanent Memorial Arch Committee, has suggested Fifth Avenue at Madison Square, where the Altar of Liberty stands. There is sufficient room here, the committee believes, and that its plans will facilitate and allow traffic to go around as well as through the arch.

The inscription proposed for the arch is:

"Erected to commemorate the homecoming of the victorious Army and Navy of these United States of America, and in memory of those who have made the supreme sacrifice for the Triumph of the Free Peoples of the World and for the Promise of an Enduring Peace."

Westchester County.

At Bronxville the firm of Burke Stone has sold for Henry Lemmermann his property on Ellison Avenue to W. D. Kraft, Jr, and for George Ranzow his property on Milburn Street to Frederick Steinmann, Inc.

Mrs. Marie Louise Cary sold her home in Rochelle Heights to Arthur Tressler Scott of Rye, N. Y. The property was held at $18,000. James D. McCann was the broker.

Leases Thirty-Room Apartment.

Alfred Nathan, President of the Nathan Manufacturing Company, has subleased for a long term of years his apartment at 820 Fifth Avenue, corner of Sixty-third Street, to John N. Willys, President of the Willys-Overland Company. The apartment, which is considered one of the finest in the city in size, decoration and appointments, contains twenty-two rooms and eight baths. Douglas L. Elliman & Co. negotiated the lease.

RENTS RAISED IN FINANCIAL CENTRE DEMAND FOR SPACE EXCEEDS SUPPLY

Tenants Requiring Additional Space Forced to Buy or Lease Existing Buildings—Great Expansion in Banking Activities Revealed in Big Realty Purchases on and Adjacent to Wall Street.

In the memory of the oldest real estate broker who has had anything to do with leasing and managing downtown property there has never before been a time when rents were so high and space so scarce and so urgently in demand. That the condition of high rents has by no means reached its maximum was indicated last week as the result of a survey of the financial and office building section in the lower part of the city by the discovery that rentals now being made to begin May 1 show in practically every instance a material advance over former prices. The average increase is from 10 to 25 per cent., but cases were cited where the advance has been as high as 50 per cent., this, however, being due to the fact that tenants required to pay such an increase enjoyed long-term leases at the lower rates prevailing prior to the war.

"The enormous expansion of business in the financial, insurance, and shipping sections of the city," said Albert E. Ponter of the Douglas Robinson, Charles S. Brown Company last week, "has created an exceptionally large demand for additional space, and tenants are willing to pay any reasonable price provided they can get what they want. The difficulty is that it is not obtainable. Large space is absolutely out of the question. There may be a few single rooms for small offices in some of the desirable buildings, but at the present time I do not know of any vacancies of that character.

"Never in my eighteen years of renting downtown office space have I known of such a condition. The average price now paid in the larger buildings, within the Broadway and Wall Street centre, is from $2.50 to $3 a square foot, which compares with $1.75 to $2.25 for similar space before the war, over four years ago. A certain amount of space was taken by the Government and other war activities. Some of that is being released slowly, but it is virtually negligible as affording any real relief. It is picked up at once, and every large broker doubtless has many applications that cannot be satisfied from tenants who are anxious to increase their space in the buildings they occupy.

"With the demand greater than the supply, rents are bound to go up, and they will remain at the present levels for some time to come because there is no possibility of any new buildings being completed to take care of the increased demand for nearly two years. If the new Cunard Building, on the Broadway and Morris Street site, were ready for occupancy now, every square foot could be filled at once, no matter what its height might be. I believe the Cunard Building will be started this season. It will be a big operation, for the plot contains over 44,000 square feet, nearly equal to that of the Equitable Building site, but under the most favorable methods of construction is cannot be available before May 1, 1921.

"Just as soon as material and labor go down and loan money becomes available, there will will surely be a building revival in the downtown section, but it may be four or five years before the supply catches up to the demand. The new building movement will undoubtedly result in much-needed improvements in the long-unimproved areas immediately east and west of Broadway. The eastern section, especially along William Street in the insurance zone, has already shown much improvement of that sort and additional construction is contemplated as early as possible, but the district west of Broadway needs many modern buildings for concerns which do not absolutely require Broadway, offices."

The inability to get necessary space for business expansion in the existing buildings in the lower commercial centre of the city has led to two expedients, one being the tendency of many concerns to buy their own property for immediate or future improvement and the other the necessity of moving to another part of the city. The former movement has been the more noticeable, and it is giving a decided impetus to the real estate selling market, as many deals in which tenants and prospective tenants have been the buyers have been closed both in the Wall Street area and in the old commercial districts along Front and Water Streets immediately north and south of Old Slip. The migratory movement from downtown to uptown localities has not yet been very noticeable, but several large firms whose increasing business demands more room are looking for the proper space in desirable sections uptown, and it is stated that this tendency is liable to increase during the coming year. Vacancies occurring from such changes will be taken without the slightest difficulty, so that the removal of firms long associated with the downtown centre will leave no gaps that cannot be filled at once.

The increase in rents, according to Mr. Ponter, is, at best, barely keeping pace with the increase in the cost of operation and maintenance of buildings. The high point in maintenance is believed to have been reached, and landlords are in the pleasant position of being able to realize very reasonable returns to compensate, in some degree, for the proportionately higher cost of maintenance which they have experienced during the war period.

One of the noteworthy examples of the necessity of acquiring new buildings by tenants wishing additional space is seen in the recent completion of the seventy-story structure at 156 to 160 Front Street, being the northerly block front between Maiden Lane and Fletcher Street, fronting nearly eighty feet on Front Street. The property was purchased late in 1917 by the Smith Valley Realty Company and the building erected for the New Jersey Zinc Company, which has taken it on a long lease.

The zinc company now occupies nearly all of the fourth floor and part of the second floor in the National City Bank on Wall Street. The expansion of its business was a direct result of the war, and the only way in which extra space could be had was to obtain its own building. It is interesting, as being the largest structure erected during the war period in that locality, and another characteristic feature is the use of zinc material to a large extent, zinc being freely used on the exterior and for interior fittings. Architecturally, the edifice is a pleasing addition to that strictly commercial section, the red brick facade, with white trim, giving a neat and pleasing effect. The zinc company is preparing to move into its new quarters on Jan. 25.

Recent leases of importance which filled the little remaining space included those of the Philippine Bank, which took a large part of the ground floor and basement in the Gaston, Williams & Wigmore Building, at 35 to 39 Broadway; the New York Discount Corporation of New York, a new banking organization, which took the vaults and former space at 52 Wall Street used by the British Bank of North America; the National Surety Company, which took the four-story building at 80 Maiden Lane, where its general offices will be established on May 1, and the leasing on a long term by the Mercantile Bank of the Americas of the nine-story building at 40 to 44 Pine Street, adjoining its present offices at 38 Pine, to be entirely occupied by the bank. Of a more distinctly mercantile character was the leasing by the Orbis Products Trading Company, a new drug and chemical firm, of the six-story building at 215 Pearl Street, between Maiden Lane and John Street.

Further indications of the remarkable expansion of the banking activities in the financial centre, leading to the purchase of valuable properties for needed space to care for the increasing business, are seen in such recent purchases as those of the old Mechanics and Metals National Bank Building at 50 Wall Street by the National City Company, a subsidiary of the National City Bank, the property being assessed at $1,000,000; the former Liverpool and London and Globe Insurance ten-story building at 45 to 49 William Street, with an extension on Pine Street, by the Bank of America, occupying the immediate Wall and William Streets corner, another $1,000,000 investment, giving the bank a greatly enlarged plot of 70 feet on Wall, 150 feet on William, and 38 feet on Pine Street for future improvement; the Mortimer Building purchase by the New York Stock Exchange, and the deals by the Federal Reserve Bank, Brown Brothers & Co., and the National Park Bank, to which should be added the purchase of the Montauk office building in William Street by Elias A. Cohen last week.

Both the Federal Reserve Bank and Brown Brothers & Co. made valuable additions adjoining their present holdings, the latter acquiring 81 and 83 Beaver Street, adjoining its new structure on the corner of Hanover and Beaver Streets, while the Federal Reserve Bank, by acquiring the twelve-story Fahys Building at 29 and 31 Liberty Street, running through to Maiden Lane, controls a plot of over 280 feet on Liberty Street, about 170 feet on Nassau Street, and 319 feet on Maiden Lane. This large site represents an investment of over $3,000,000, which will ultimately be improved with a fine bank building.

The Montauk office building, an eight-story structure, occupies the easterly portion of the large block of which the greater portion is now in the Federal Reserve Bank ownership. It covers the William Street block front between Maiden Lane and Liberty Street, having been built by the late J. Metcalfe Thomas, from whose estate it was purchased. As its construction provided for four additional stories, if required, it is more than likely that the new owner will add to its rental capacity, especially as the demand in the heart of the insurance zone is so much greater than the supply.

The National Park Bank's deal for prospective enlargement of its building is peculiarly interesting, apart from being another object lesson of the rapid expansion of the banking business in this city, in that when the contemplated improvement is made it will remove two cherished landmarks of lower Manhattan—the ancient Brosnan's café at 151 Fulton Street, and the adjoining building at 149 Fulton Street, running through to Ann Street, used as Mouquin's restaurant for many years. With these parcels the bank controls a choice plot of 137.10 feet on Fulton Street, 114.14 feet on Ann Street, and 59.4 feet on Broadway.

Not in many years have so many parcels of choicely located property been purchased by banking and financial interests as has been the case within the last few months.

AUCTION MARKET.

Some Notable Sales of the Year—Optimism for the Future.

In discussing some phases of the real estate market during the year which has just closed, with special reference to the auction offerings, Joseph P. Day called attention to the success of the Manhattan Beach sale of 400 lots in August, all of which were disposed of in one afternoon for a total of nearly $400,000.

"In the same month another successful auction sale was held, which included many hundreds of vacant parcels and a number of houses at Brightwaters, L. I.," said Mr. Day. "It was regarded as very successful, in view of the distance from New York City and the general lack of buying power for suburban property. The total amounted to slightly over $200,000.

"The last large auction sale of the year was held on Dec. 17, the property offered belonging to the estate of Louisa Dash, and consisting of eighty-five lots and one residence, on West 238th and West 242d Streets and Waldo Avenue. While the prices were rather low, it was reported that all the property had been disposed of for a total of $54,750.

"I believe we are at the doors of one of the most prosperous real estate and business periods in our history. The fact that market conditions have changed is evidenced in the number of real estate sales since the signing of the armistice. Some of the old-time operators and builders have returned to the market. Recently Franklin Pettit was the purchaser involving the exchange of a tract of vacant lots in the Thomson Hill section of Long Island City on the Queens Boulevard and two large apartment houses. Their value was reported to be over $1,250,000.

"There is a substantial demand for residential and commercial space which causes a steady buying power from tenants and residents and business concerns desirous of securing permanent quarters. Before the market improvement actually comes to pass, ample mortgage funds must come into the real estate market. This will probably not occur until the immediate financing of the war is finished."

Preparing for Queens Building.

With the beginning of the new year indications of active building operations are being shown in Queens Borough. Several plans have been filed with the Building Bureau.

The Julius Strauss Realty Company is preparing to erect twenty-four two-story frame dwellings on Meredith Avenue north of Lachan Street, Arverne, at a cost of $50,000. Frank Pesl will erect a two-story brick factory on plot 25 by 100 at the southwest corner of Ely and Payntar Avenues, Long Island City, and Anthony Breszenski has filed plans for five two-and-a-half-story frame dwellings on Shelton Street east of Campion Avenue, Jamaica, at a cost of $15,000.

East Bronx Sale.

Joseph P. Day sold for the Holding Company 282 East 165th Street, a five-story flat, on a plot 45 by 81, fully leased, and was sold to A. Savada, represented by Joseph Wolkenberg, for investment.

Clarke Estate Sells $35,000 Dwelling

The estate of Anna M. Clarke sold to Mable S. Cameron 51 West Fifty-eighth Street, a four-story dwelling on a lot 16.8 by 100, held at $35,000. George J. Humphries negotiated the sale.

FIFTH AVENUE SURPRISE.

Sixth Tall Apartment Project Reflects Changes in Choice Centre.

Undoubtedly the most interesting as well as the most surprising feature of the realty market last week was the announcement that Fifth Avenue was to have another tall apartment house right in the heart of the choicest residential section north of Fifty-ninth Street. To those who had hoped that this thoroughfare would not again be invaded by apartment house construction for some time to come, the fact that the site selected for immediate improvement was in the Astor mansion block and that the high building will overtop the home of the late Colonel John Jacob Astor, now owned by Vincent Astor, came with the suddenness of a shock. It was only a few years ago that the conservative minded residents and owners on the avenue were somewhat dismayed when a bold owner put up a twelve-story house adjoining the marble residence of Henry Phipps at the north corner of Eighty-seventh Street. Apartment construction on upper Fifth Avenue would appear to be as ruthless as that of commercial buildings in former home centres prior to the enactment of the zoning law.

Ten years ago the announcement of a big apartment next to the Astor mansion, which occupies more than half a block front at the north Sixty-fifth Street corner, would have created consternation among the tenants in the immediate locality if not throughout the city. When a tall apartment house was first broached several years ago for the north corner of Seventy-first Street, sentiment was so strong in the vicinity that owners acquired additional land to block the plan and it did not go up. That was but a temporary success, however, in so far as keeping the modern type of multi-family homes from the avenue and the first big project to go through was the twelve-story house on the north corner of Eighty-first Street. Despite its high rentals it was a success and it naturally led to the acquirement of other property on the avenue which the old residents no longer wanted and for which there was apparently no market for use as private dwellings.

There are now five twelve-story modern apartments on the avenue, being, in addition to those at Eighty-first Street and adjoining the Phipps home, on Seventy-fourth, Seventy-second, and Sixty-third Street corners, the latter being the former Progress Club site, within three blocks of the latest projection.

It speaks well for the management of this newest Fifth Avenue apartment that, notwithstanding the high cost of materials and the difficulty of financing large operations, it has been possible to complete all of these onerous details so that construction will start in a short time and the new house will be ready for tenants during the Summer of 1919. The Grant B. Schley estate, as the owner of the property, is the leader in the operation, the plot to be improved including the fine Schley residence fronting 50 feet on the avenue at the south corner of Sixty-sixth Street, while the frontage on the street is 160 feet, taking in three additional private houses. William Henry Barnum & Co. will erect the building, and the firm has provided the building loan. J. E. R. Carpenter and Cross & Cross will be associate architects. The building will cost about $1,000,000. It will be attractively designed, the present intention being to provide a single suite of about twenty rooms for each floor.

Building Materials for Norway

What is thought to be the first shipment of American house-building materials ever sent direct to Norway has recently gone forward, and a trade that was started with the help of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce now promises to develop into one of important dimensions.

The bureau is just in receipt of the following self-explanatory letter from the New York representative of the company chiefly concerned in the transaction:

"A couple of weeks ago I went to Louisiana and purchased about 120,000 feet of yellow pine in the different dimensions suitable for wooden buildings, which was shipped from New Orleans within a few days direct to Norway. We have since placed an order about half that size, and we now expect that other orders will follow right along.

"We also shipped from New York some 17,000 pounds of American tile and ceramic flooring and some deadening quilt for walls and floors, and have placed orders for high-class and, in part, carved interiors in quartered oak, mahogany, and satinwood, for a certain brand of special-type panels, for ornamental compo ceilings, for plumbing fixtures, water filters, metal roofing, and a number of other building materials for the houses to be erected by a company in Christiania as samples of American building materials and appliances. The company is being organised to carry a stock of such materials at Christiania, Bergen, and Trondhjem."

Operator Resells at Profit.

Resale in a cash transaction for a substantial profit of the six-story elevator apartment houses at 726 to 736 West 181st Street was consummated yesterday by the Nason Realty Company (Max N. Natanson, President), to Joseph Shenk, who has more than 100 houses in his charge, either as owner or lessee.

The properties have accommodations for 120 families, all suites being occupied at rentals approximating $62,000. They were held for $400,000 and occupy a plot 200 by 150 by irregular. The Nason Company bought the houses about three weeks ago from the Ambrose Realty Company.

STUDY SUBWAY SYSTEM.

Thirty-fourth Street Board Discovers Much Dissatisfaction.

The Board of Directors of the Thirty-fourth Street Board of Trade has authorized its Transportation Committee to employ a traffice expert to study the various suggestions made to the committee as a result of the questionnaire upon the transportation situation sent to business men and property owners throughout the district.

"While the Thirty-fourth Street Board of Trade was organized to look after all of the varied interests of the section," said Vivian Green, the President, yesterday, "it became apparent that the foremost question was the subway situation. The criticism of the present subway system has been vigorous and general, even though it may not be deserved.

"Many replies have been received and they are unanimous in condemning the existing system. It would appear that New York has grown accustomed to the old route across Forty-second Street and wants that service restored. A proportion of our replies also requests a service from upper Lexington Avenue, across Forty-second Street and down Seventh Avenue. Whether this is feasible or not from an operating standpoint, the 'man in the street' believes a joint interchange of trains on each arm of the 'H' system is what he wants.

"The problems presented are highly technical and involved and we realize that it is a question for experts. The man we expect to engage is a recognized leader in his field. When his report is made public we believe it will be found of great value to all New York, as he will represent in no sense any special interests."

KEW GARDENS BUILDING.

Plans Made for Early Construction of Artistic Suburban Homes.

Announcement was made last week by the Kew Gardens Corporation that it is ready to build homes for those who wish to move from the city and live in suburban communities. The labor situation, cost of material, purchasing power of money and the strength of the demand for suburban living were factors which the directors considered before making their decision. The Kew Gardens Corporation is not only to be land seller but home builder as well.

The Kew Gardens Construction Company has been incorporated at Albany. As an auxiliary of the Kew Gardens Corporation, the land owning company, it will do the building at Kew Gardens and Richmond Hill.

Renwick, Aspinwall & Tucker will be the architects of the projected homes and they will range in cost from $10,000 to $50,000.

$250,000 Purchase in West Bronx.

Morris Polsky sold to Frederick Brown, operator, 1,764 to 1,776 Weeks Avenue, four five-story apartments, on a plot 200 by 95. The property shows a gross rental of $34,000 and was held at $250,000. Leitner, Brener & Starr negotiated the sale.

Manhattan's Crooked Streets.

The irregularity of the streets in lower Manhattan is due to the fact that the nucleus of the present New York City grew for thirty years before streets were laid out. Settlers in those days, as is still done in country districts, built their homes wherever they liked.

A BUILDING ACHIEVEMENT.

Two Mammoth Hotels Successfully Built Under War Conditions.

While New York is the centre of financial and commercial exchange for half the globe, it is in a great measure the focal point to which all routes of travel converge, and whence they radiate to all important points of destination in both hemispheres.

This tremendous tide of travel which flows uninterruptedly year in and year out, during all seasons of the year, has created a demand for hotel accommodations not equaled in any city in the world.

The millions of visitors who came and enjoy the hospitality of the city are deeply impressed with the progressive modernism, magnificence, and luxuriousness of its hotels.

Some one hotel has always been in vogue, and society will always have its favorite rendezvous. In the early seventies, the hotel belt comprised the territory between Fourteenth Street on the south and the vicinity of Madison Square on the north, where were located such landmarks as the Brunswick, Fifth Avenue, Albemarle, and the Hoffman House. All had memories of the city's most active social and business activities.

With the northerly trend of business and residential districts, the newer hotels were erected on sites further uptown, in the district bounded by Thirty-fourth street on the south and Fifty-ninth Street on the north, and from Broadway to Lexington Avenue.

Historically, there can be much said about the early days of hotel keeping in New York. In former days all they attempted was relative comfort. Plain, substantial food for man and beast was the task they set themselves. Hotels were for travelers, and the tourist and sightseeing guest was made as comfortable as possible.

Times, nevertheless, change. Just when the new hotel idea attracted immense capital investment cannot be recalled, but the recent merger of large hotel interests into single ownerships would indicate that the better class of hotels are more than ordinary income producers.

The era of magnificence and display that New York is now witnessing is nowhere more pronounced than in the two mighty hotels just completed by the George A. Fuller Company, builders, Paul Starrett, President. These two additions to the long list of New York hotels are the New Commodore Hotel and the Pennsylvania Hotel. The former adjoins the Grand Central Terminal on the east, and occupies the northwest corner of Lexington Avenue and Forty-second Street, and the latter occupies the block front in Seventh Avenue from Thirty-second to Thirty-third Street, directly opposite the Pennsylvania Station.

Built simultaneously under war conditions, when material and labor were at a premium, the successful completion of these mammoth buildings and their opening within a few days of each other will stand out as an epoch-making achievement in the annals of building construction.

The aim of the builders was to produce two of the largest hotels in the world, and in so doing translate into concrete expression the ideals and enthusiasm of the two leading hotel managers of the country—John McE. Bowman and E. M. Statler. Each hotel possesses individuality and characteristics quite distinct and apart from the other. The Commodore was designed by Warren & Wetmore, architects, and the Pennsylvania by McKim, Mead & White, architects.

The New Commodore, which will open its doors to the public on Tuesday, undoubtedly adds strength and decorum to the group of high-class hotels in the vicinity of the Grand Central Terminal, comprising the Belmont, Murray Hill, Manhattan, and the Biltmore, all under the management of John McE. Bowman. Rising twenty-eight stories above the street grade, with five levels below the street, a part of the structure is erected over the new subway extension which curves into Lexington Avenue from Park Avenue.

The Hotel Pennsylvania, situated opposite to the Pennsylvania Station, in the easterly side of Seventh Avenue, between Thirty-second and Thirty-third Streets, opened yesterday, has the distinction of being the largest hotel in the world, having 2,200 rooms. It has twenty-two floors from the street level to the roof, inclusive, and three levels in the penthouse.

Some idea may be had of the magnitude of the undertaking to build two hotels at the same time during adverse conditions when it is considered that the following list of materials had to be assembled by the Fuller Construction Company: 12,600,000 bricks, 475,000 cubic feet of back-up tile, 208,000 barrels of cement, 23,800 tons of steel, 3,000,000 T. C. blocks, 17,916 door openings, 6,191 window openings, 24,300 tons of plaster, 5,366 stair treads, 35,600 linear feet corridors all floors, 23 freight and service elevators, 26 passenger elevators, 13,495 plumbing fixtures, 1,200,000 feet of conduit, 3,250,000 feet of wire, 745,000 feet of steam piping, 900,000 feet of plumbing piping, 50,000 feet of refrigerating piping.

Bills Affecting Realty.

Landlords Prohibited from Discriminating Against Tenants with Children. (Assem. Int. No. 47, Pr. 47.) Mr. Goldberg.

An act to amend the Penal Law by adding new Section 495, effective Sept. 1, 1919, making it a misdemeanor in any city of the first class to refuse to rent an apartment house to any person or family solely on the ground that such person or family has a child or children under 14 years of age; also prohibits future leases containing any provision that lease is to terminate on the birth of a child; any such provision is declared to be against public policy and absolutely void.

START CAMPAIGN FOR IMPROVEMENTS

The Forty-Second Street Association Announces Its 1919 Program.

CONGESTION OF SUBWAY

To Intensify Times Square and Forty-Second Street as the Hub of Greater New York.

The Forty-second Street Association at its last meeting launched a campaign to secure various improvements in and about Times Square and intensify the importance of the section as the "heart of Greater New York."

Walter J. Salmon, President of the association, presided at the meeting, and after a general discussion of the conditions prevailing at present he said: "Now is the time for all owners of property and the business men on and in the vicinity of Forty-second Street to get together and demand relief from some of the intolerable conditions we are confronted with.

"While the officials of the city and the transit companies wrangle over personalities, the public, as usual, is made to suffer. For years we have remained silent while the residents of Brooklyn, Staten Island, Harlem and the Bronx have dictated what in their judgment was best for Forty-second Street.

"Most of us who are directly interested financially and otherwise in the street have had nothing to say. In the meantime the subway conditions have become intolerable; congestion has increased until it seems that the proverbial sardine box is a roomy palace compared to the stations and cars of our own little transit tube.

"In getting together as we have now done and decided to take the initiative, I suggest that the Association concentrate upon obtaining such improvements for our district as the following:

"Adequate subway service to and from the two present subway systems; to improve street traffic conditions notably at Fifth Avenue, Pershing and Times Squares; enlist proper recognition and support on the part of our public officials; encourage hotel and amusement enterprises development; increase sales at retail stores by adding to the prestige of the street as a shopping centre; improve building conditions so that new building enterprises may be encouraged; obtain tenants; and to provide a system of transfers to and from the Forty-second Street crosstown cars that will be equitable to the transit companies and to the public.

"In fact, we should devote our energies and abilities to a concerted movement to intensify this thoroughfare as the hub of the Greater City. These projects are all the reasonable and possible kind.

"Every man really worth while today owes a reasonable amount of his time and thought to the community in which he lives or conducts his business, and every man in this territory having business, property, or professional interest therein, should therefore become a member of the Forty-second Street Association and share in the work of securing needed improvements, new industries, and a bigger and busier community.

"Projects of more or less magnitude depend for their accomplishment upon the organized and energized efforts of our citizens. The individual alone can accomplish little. Only through financial and numerical strength can effective and constructive progress be made.

"A body of one thousand civic workers united into an association has almost no limit to what it can do for the betterment of the business and civic interests of this community, and, considering the delays and blunders recently made by officials and others in the laying out of the subway and other so-called improvements in our midst, it is time for us to unite and step in and have a voice in the matters that directly affect us."

Edward W. Forrest, formerly Secretary of the Federated Civic Associations of New York, was appointed Secretary of the Forty-second Street Association. John McE. Bowman of the Commodore Hotel was appointed Chairman of the Advisory Board

Realty's Victory Dinner.

The twenty-second annual banquet of the Real Estate Board of New York will be held on Feb. 15 at the New Hotel Commodore, Lexington Avenue and Forty-second Street.

In calling attention to the forthcoming banquet, Elisha Sniffin, Chairman of the Dinner Committee, says it will be the Real Estate Board's celebration of the greatest victory in the world's history. He believes that the capacity of the ballroom of the Commodore, 1,500, will be subscribed for at an early date and urges members to make their reservations at the earliest possible moment. Tables will accommodate ten persons. Mr. Sniffin says the speakers this year will be men of national prominence.

The Real Estate Board did not hold a banquet last year, because of the war, but as a substitute arranged a benefit performance for the army and navy relief societies at the Hippodrome, which was one of the most successful of the season. Upward of $10,000 was turned over to these societies as a result of the benefit.

New York's Waterfront.

New York has 578 miles of waterfront, of which 450 miles are available for pier construction. The harbor is far superior to that of London or of Liverpool. The Thames is a brook beside the Hudson, and requires constant dredging. Liverpool has a tide of 30 feet range, with enormous watergate construction required to overcome it, while New York Harbor is practically tide free.

In so far as docking space is concerned, New York can expand her harbor to a capacity equaling the combined dockage space of any five of the main ports of Europe.

On the Manhattan shore of North River, between Thirty-sixth and Thirty-ninth Streets, the city has begun the construction of a series of gigantic piers for modern leviathans. These piers are 1,050 feet long, with slips 350 feet wide, having a depth of 44 feet at mean low water.

HOOVER SEES MARKET PERIL TO OUR FARMERS

EUROPE'S STRAIN IS OFF

REMEDY IN PACKERS' CASE

If They Are Making Too Much, He Says, Let Legislators Tax Profits Out of Them.

PARIS, Jan. 26, (Associated Press.)—Herbert C. Hoover, United States Food Administrator and Director General of the international relief organization, gave out the following statement today:

"The dominating food problem in the United States at this moment is a very much bigger problem than the Chicago packers—it is a problem of the American farmer.

"If the packer's profit of 2 or 3 per cent. on his turnover is too high, it is the duty of Congress to tax it out of him. If the farmer's prices threaten to fall below the level of a fair return it behooves the country to do some quick, clear thinking.

"The perplexities arising out of inability to demobilize totally the food situation of the world in the period between the armistice and peace make the farmers' position in the matter of much more immediate concern than the future of the Chicago packers.

"Taking it broadly, before the European war began we exported about 5,000,000 tons of food a year. This year we are prepared to export at the rate of from fifteen to twenty millions tons. The increase represents the patriotic service of the American farmer, plus the voluntary sacrifice of the average American under the stimulation of the pleas from the allied Governments that without an enormous increase in our food supplies their very lives would be menaced.

Armistice Created a Food Surplus.

"The submarine had so shortened the worlds shipping that the Allies were unable to reach the distant markets of the Southern Hemisphere, and we were bound to create in America sufficient food to carry Europe. If the war had gone on, every pound of it and more would have been required by the Allies before next harvest.

"The armistice came suddenly, freeing shipping from military use and reopening to the Allies the cheaper Southern Hemisphere and the colonial markets, where, in addition, they could have more liberal credits and markets for their manufactures.

"We are thus faced with a serious problem with respect to our own great supplies, patriotically accumulated. If an early peace is signed, and the markets of Europe are opened freely to trade, there will be a greater demand for food from the new mouths than ever this surplus could supply. But in the period between the armistice and peace we have a very difficult situation.

"One of the most critical food shortages in the world was that of fats, and the only help lay in an increase in the American hog. Our Agricultural Department and the Food Administration spared no efforts to stimulate this production. Our farmers were assured that in the general shortage, subject only to the uncertainties of war, they would experience no difficulty in marketing their products. Due to the savings of our people and the gradually increased production of our farmers, we have lifted our ability to export from 50,000,000 pounds of fats per month in the Summer of 1917 to 400,000,000 pounds per month in this January.

"To achieve this demobilization of fats it was necessary to mobilize the packers as well as the farmers. There is no doubt that the vast volume of business brought profit to the packers, although at a less percentage than before the Food Administration took charge of it.

"The allied nations, in order to effect regular supplies to their people in the face of short shipping and to provide for Government rationing, were compelled to take over the entire purchase of these food supplies and thereby abandon the ordinary flow of trade and commerce. In consequence, they concentrated their buying through agencies, and the power of these buying agencies was so great that they controlled the prices.

"The business of the Food Administration was to bring these buying agents, the representatives of the farmers, who are predominatingly interested, and the great and small packers together and to see to it that a square deal was obtained all around. The prices were settled in a joint conference of the farmers the representatives of the Allies' buyers, and the great and small packers under the general arrangement that the packer was allowed but a quarter of a cent a pound over and above the price to the farmer and the cost of raw material and labor for packing. The Allies took the entire surplus.

"The situation changed over night with the armistice. The Allies are not only seeking the Southern Hemisphere markets, but they have also lately ac-

Greek-Armenian Alliance Planned for Near East Peace.

LONDON, Jan. 26, (Associated Press.) — Christos Vasilliakakis, a member of the Greek Parliament, who recently visited the United States, today said Greece was preparing to establish cordial relations with Armenia in order to resist Turkish aggression and insure the maintenance of peace in the Near East.

He said Greece would support Armenia's aspirations for independence, and the acquisition of the Vilayet of Trebizond and other districts in the Black Sea littoral which formerly were Greek but now are inhabited largely by Armenians.

It is announced that a joint memorial service for Armenian and Greek victims of the war will be held this week in the Greek church here. The service will be followed by mass meetings in Trafalgar Square, called for the purpose of ratifying the proposed entente between Greece and Armenia.

LEADERS PREDICT AN EXTRA SESSION

Fear Congress Will Not Be Able to Complete Its Work by March 4.

LOOK TO WILSON'S RETURN

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.—As this session of Congress draws to a close, with thirty-two legislative days remaining until it expires by limitation on March 4, it is becoming evident to leaders of both sides that an extra session probably will be necessary to enact the annual appropriation bills.

President Wilson informed Democratic managers before his departure for Europe that he was opposed to an extra session, and, in accordance with his ideas, every effort has been made by the House leaders to expedite legislation and clear the calendar of the supply measures, so as to make ready for consideration of the conference report on the Revenue bill.

While most of the supply measures have been passed by the House, the two big bills, the army and navy appropriation measures, have not yet been reported from committee. Both have been under long consideration in committee. While unanimity of opinion prevails as to the Army bill, such is not the case as to the Navy bill.

Both parties early agreed that they would not support Secretary Baker's bill for the creation of a standing army of 500,000 and the carrying into effect of the present arrangements, such as a permanent General Staff. The bill, which will be reported in a few days, will authorize the President to have an emergency army of 500,000 and continue the war arrangements. This will be attached to the Army Appropriation bill as a rider. It removes opposition to the bill in that it fails to establish a permanent military policy, as would have been the case if the committee adopted the ideas recommended by Secretary Baker and the General Staff.

Another policy is under attack in the Navy bill. Secretary Daniels recommended that a navy shall be built as large as that of Great Britain and in appearing before the Naval Committee said the President approved of the plan, even after the armistice was signed. His bill provides for a second three-year building program and the enlargement of the personel accordingly. Republican opposition, supported by the small navy group in the Democratic Party, immediately appeared.

Representative Thomas S. Butler, who, it is expected, will be Chairman of the Naval Committee in the next Congress, and Representative William J. Browning of New Jersey have been uncompromising in their opposition, contending that nothing should be done in the way of construction until after the Peace Conference has passed upon armaments. Representative C. J. Kelley of Michigan, another Republican, mildly supported the views of Butler and Browning, but recently has come to the conclusion that it is wiser to prepare for a bigger navy, even as a police protection, than bring naval expansion to a dead halt.

The situation today is that the Naval bill will be reported next Friday substantially as recommended by Secretary Daniels. It, however, will not provide for the authorization of any small craft. A provision will be carried in the bill instructing the Secretary of the Navy to investigate and report to the next Congress as to styles and number of small craft that will be necessary as the result of experience in the war.

The Naval bill will carry an appropriation of about $750,000,000, and authorizes as a part of the three-year building program the building of ten battleships and ten scout cruisers. For the fiscal year the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to contract for two battleships, which, when entirely completed, will have cost about $32,400,000 each.

With these two bills, the revenue measure, and two or three supply measures, including the Agriculture Appropriation bill, still to be enacted by the House, the opinion prevails among conservative Democratic leaders that even the House cannot complete the necessary legislation before March 4 unless President Wilson on his return is able to influence the expedition of matters in both ends of Congress.

Legislation to carry out the national prohibition amendment will come before this Congress, and this will consume a week or ten days, unless the prohibition forces are willing to let the matter go over to the next Congress.

In the Senate the congestion appears impossible to overcome before March 4. Of course, the Senate can dispose of annual appropriation bills very quickly, and if the disposition exists to pass all the necessary legislation before March 4, it can be done. But the Senate may consume weeks in discussing railroad matters, which will come to the fore in connection with the request of Director General Hines for an additional revolving fund of $750,000,000.

CONFER IN BERLIN ON STEPS TO CURB SOCIAL DISORDER

Cabinet and Other High Officials Decide That Stern Measures Must Be Taken.

LIGHTS SUDDENLY CUT OFF

PEOPLE FEAR CALAMITIES

Wholesale Danger to Life in Labor Clashes—Spartacism Spreads in Provinces.

By Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, Jan. 23, (via Copenhagen.)—The other day all the big guns of the Government, including Foreign Minister Brockdorff-Rantzau, General Gröner, and the most prominent People's Commissioners, were in session at the Chancellor's palace. They were holding forth on the many events that had befallen Germany—the Spartacus risings, the strike epidemic, the fact that murder and burglary were rampant in town and country, the disorganization of traffic, the deterioration of administration, and the dissolution of social institutions.

Something must be done, all agreed, and something would be done at once, with no nonsense about it, to prevent entire collapse, "and just then the lights went out and the meeting adjourned in darkness," states a newspaper report, adding that the Government had been entirely unprepared for the electric strike that threw Berlin into Egyptian darkness.

This report is typical of the whole situation here. Hardly does the Government succeed in mastering one calamity when it is overwhelmed by another from an entirely unexpected quarter.

The electric strike has done much to open even the eyes of the man in the street to the fact that there is an effort to turn the revolution into a movement for higher wages, no matter if all Germany suffers in consequence. That strike created some situations endangering the lives of huge masses of people.

Passengers' Lives Endangered.

For instance, the whole Potsdamer depot was without light, the switches having to be operated in darkness, and the trains lacking illumination, as well as the platforms and railway yards. In this dense darkness masses of suburbanites, surprised by the strike in Berlin, stormed the trains in order to reach home, and it seems incredible that no one was killed or seriously hurt, though many fainted, were bruised, or otherwise slightly injured.

Physicians' experiences in the smaller hospitals and dispensaries during the strike were of such an intolerable nature that they are now planning to make the workmen understand that they can count no longer on physicians' services if they continue to ignore human needs. Indeed, the Bremen physicians have already decided to answer strike by strike, meaning that they will at once cease all activity, private or in hospitals, if Bremen's supply of food, coal, gas, or electricity should be endangered again by strikes or if Bremen's Government should continue to make arrests for political reasons.

The members of the Bremen Druggists' Associations have indorsed the physicians' attitude, declaring that they will close all the chemists' shops if the Spartacide proceedings continue. The physicians and druggists of Berlin, Leipsic, and other large cities may follow the example, as well as other professional men and whole classes of administrative officials.

Today a gas workers' strike is threatened, but it is hoped that the officials will not again be caught napping and that the unavoidable concessions will be made in time to prevent another calamity.

Curiously enough the darkness did not increase the number of deeds of lawlessness markedly. Either the underworld was not prepared for such good luck or it too cannot do without any light.

Spartacides Turn Pirates.

The housetop war has ceased for the present. Indeed, it seems as if bombers of Spartacides have gone into the country to escape Governor Noske's military forces.

Some of them turned pirates, commandeered three mine-searching boats, and invaded, 235 in number, the North Sea Island of Wangeroog. The people of Wangeroog, however, would stand no nonsense. They went at the pirating Spartacides with guns and the tail ends of cables, and made the whole lot prisoners. The Sparta-

Returned Canadian Soldiers Beat Radical Socialists

WINNIPEG, Manitoba, Jan. 26.—Radical Socialists who attempted to hold a mass meeting today were roughly handled by a group of returned soldiers, who first broke up an assemblage of extremists in Market Square and then wrecked the headquarters of the radicals. Members of the Radical Council who were in the building were allowed to escape, but the furniture was destroyed and windows smashed.

A red flag and much seditious literature were burned and many of the radicals were forced to salute the Canadian flag. The soldiers went about their work quietly and no arrests were made. Black eyes and other bruises were the only injuries.

Court-Martial at Genoa Reveals That Austria Paid $2,500,000 to Plotters.

MILAN, Jan. 25.—Startling disclosures are made at the naval court-martial now sitting at Genoa for the trial of half a dozen persons accused of being concerned in the destruction of the Italian dreadnought Leonardo da Vinci. The battleship met a fate similar to that of the Benedetto Brin; being blown out of the water in Taranto roadstead on Aug. 3, 1916, by an infernal clock machine hidden in the powder magazine. Two hundred and fifty-eight members of the crew, including the commander and twenty-one officers, were blown to pieces.

It has now transpired that the plot was hatched by the former Austro-Hungarian Consul at Naples, Cavaliere Gaeta, at the instigation of the Imperial Government. Gaeta assumed the name of Emilio Battistella and got into touch with Enea Vincenzi, a wholesale fruit merchant living at Modena, who had previously had extensive export trade dealings with Austria. Vincenzi happened to have a bosom friend in the local Commissioner of Police, Cimmaruta, who introduced him personally to numerous high functionaries in Rome and at the Ministry of Marine. In this way the services of Arconti, Deputy Chief of Torpedo Defense at Magdalena, and also those of the Leonardo da Vinci commander's Secretary and Quartermaster Criscuolo were secured as accomplices. Furthermore, the inevitable feminine decoy was at hand in Vincenzi's mistress, a daring Trentino adventuress, devoted to the Hapsburg interests, named Ida Clementi.

These preliminaries having been arranged, Austria entered into a definite contract with the conspirators in February, 1916, assigning about £500,000 as the price of blood, of which £300,000 was to go to the arch plotter.

Meantime, on the score of their influential testimonials and friendships, the principal plotters obtained frequent access to the ship, sometimes on the pretense of selling war loan bonds on behalf of the Roman Central Bank.

Apart from the depositions of witnesses, evidence against the prisoners has been furnished in the shape of photographic snapshots and in copious notebooks seized in Zurich during a burglary at the Austrian espionage offices situated over the famous bank.

These notebooks, which, together with a vast quantity of other compromising documents, were afterward sold by thieves to the Italian Government, are in the handwriting of the notorious Dr. Mayer, head Director of the Austro-German spy department in Switzerland. They contain minute entries describing the accused traitors, their movements, and those of certain accomplices who fled from justice. Their correspondence, and exact details about the money disbursed to them for this and other outrages perpetrated on Italian territory. Besides his share of cash, the Austrian ex-Consul Gaeta was rewarded with an important post in the civil service at Vienna.

Ebert Government Does Not Regard the Question as Urgent.

BERLIN, Jan. 23, (Associated Press.)—The Ebert Government has made no official announcement as to what its attitude will be toward the possible demand by the Entente for the surrender of the former German Emperor.

A the Foreign Office today the correspondent was informed that as no demand had come from any foreign official quarters for the surrender the question was not an urgent one.

The Government view appears to be that as William Hohenzollern voluntarily took refuge in Holland, the German Government has only limited power in the matter.

PARIS, Jan. 26.—The Commissary of the Mets Court has placed the property of the former German Emperor in Alsace-Lorraine under sequestration. The decree of sequestration says at the beginning:

"Whereas Wilhelm II., a German subject, is now in flight owing to the victorious advance of the Entente army, and has abandoned certain personal property in Alsace-Lorraine," &c.

A BRITISH VOLUNTEER ARMY

Its Early Creation Pledged, with Quickest Possible Demobilization of Present Forces.

LONDON, Jan. 26.—Anticipating an announcement to be made Thursday by a conference of Sir Eric Geddes, former First Lord of the Admiralty; Field Marshal Sir Douglas Haig and Major General Henry H. Wilson, Chief of the General Staff of the British Army, now meeting in Paris, a statement issued by the War Office tonight says:

"The proposals of the conference will make sure that we have in every theatre of the war sufficient forces during the present year to see that we are not robbed of our victories, and the Germans and their confederates will be made to execute faithfully and punctually the conditions not only of the armistice, but the treaty of peace, when that is signed; and they will also enable us to discharge our own duty toward our allies and those dependent upon us.

"It must be clearly understood that, while Great Britain is prepared to do her share of the work still to be done, she will not be asked to do more than her share, and that the United States, France, and Italy will act with her in maintaining the common interests and securing the advantages gained together.

"Further, Great Britain's special obligations in maintaining the Indian Empire and the wide regions which we now hold in the Middle East, as well as the part played by the royal navy, have been taken into consideration in computing what that share should be.

"The task to be undertaken is therefore the formation and maintenance of armies of occupation of moderate size, compared with what we now have, but of the highest discipline and efficiency, which will discharge our duty and safeguard British interests during the period which must elapse before the ordinary peacetime volunteer army can be created.

"The pay of the armies of occupation must be substantially advanced, while the present armies will be continued to be demobilized as quickly as possible."

GERMAN AIM TO QUALIFY FOR LEAGUE OF NATIONS

Bernstorff Says Weimar Convention Is Counted On to Prove Nation's Stability.

BERLIN, Jan. 23, (Associated Press.)—The Foreign Office is greatly interested in press dispatches from Paris today saying that Germany and Russia are only to be admitted to the League of Nations when their political situations have reached stability.

Count von Bernstorff today informed the correspondent that Foreign Office officials and other high personages were unanimously of the opinion that this situation, if it had not already been attained, would be completely solved with the meeting of the Assembly.

"It is true that there is much economic disorganization in Germany today," said Count von Bernstorff, "but the orderliness of the elections last Sunday affords evidence of stability in political conditions which is highly gratifying to us. It is too early to say that communism, or bolshevism, is quite killed, but undoubtedly the determined measures taken against it by the Provisional Government have rendered it practically powerless. In the face of the decided expression of the popular will evidenced by the elections communism has ceased to be a serious political factor.

"Even if all the twenty-four Independents elected to the Assembly were adherents to the Spartacide doctrine—and not more than half a dozen of them are suspected of such sympathies—they would be powerless before the nearly 400 delegates who, whatever their other political tenets, are all opponents of any class of dictatorship.

"Significant in this connection is the fact that the new Democratic Party, which I joined at its foundation, secured no fewer than seventy-seven seats, thus holding the balance of power between the Socialists and the more conservative parties, preventing a purely Socialist Government. Another important point is that although a number of former Reichstag members were elected to the Assembly the membership as a whole is composed of new, representative and able men and women, whose lives and activities are a guarantee of earnest and honest constructive work at Weimar."

Copyright, 1919, by The Chicago Tribune Company.

PARIS, Jan. 26.—The smaller nations today started an organized protest for greater representation on the committees of the Peace Congress. This followed their effort in the Hall of the Clock yesterday to overthrow the program arranged by the five great Powers by which the nineteen little nations would receive five members among them on each committee.

The Belgians met today and drew up a memorial to Premier Clemenceau, amplifying the position of M. Hymans, who yesterday opened a movement for greater representation. The Serbian delegation likewise prepared a protest. Other small nations are preparing to follow suit.

The small powers take the position that Belgium and Serbia, which suffered in the war as much proportionally as the big nations, ought to have direct representation on the committees instead of being lumped with the other small peoples.

The memorial to Clemenceau will suggest that these groups of nations be formed: The five big powers, the small powers, Belgium and Serbia, which were great sufferers; the nations which fought in the war, but were not in the same class as to sacrifices as the first two, and the nations which declared war, but did not do much fighting—the basis of representation on the committees to be determined according to such groups.

PICHON IN DOUBT ON RUSSIAN PARLEY

BOLSHEVIKI AS A FACTION

Only That Recognition Granted —Minister Confident on Success of League Plan.

PARIS, Jan. 26, (Associated Press.)—Stephen Pichon, the French Foreign Minister, received The Associated Press and a number of British, American, Italian, and Japanese newspaper correspondents at his private office in the Foreign Office today and talked freely and frankly on the status of the big foreign questions as they are affected by the conference. The meeting was in the same room where the council of the great powers meets, and for a time the press representatives found themselves occupying the same environment as the council of the great powers.

"We have no response from any of the Russian elements," said the Minister, answering the first question, relative to the invitation to the Russians to meet at Princes' Islands for a conference with the allied and associated powers. "We have seen reports in the papers giving the views of the Russian groups in Paris, and the published dispatch to M. Longuet, (leader of the French Minority Socialists,) relative to the Bolsheviki, but beyond these press publications nothing has been received from any groups or elements."

The Minister was asked if these non-official statements were accepted as indicating that the meeting at Princes' Islands would not take place.

"There is some doubt as to that," replied M. Pichon, "as the Bolsheviki in this nonofficial statement do not say positively that they will not attend, but merely present some objections."

As to whether a meeting could be arranged elsewhere than at Princes' Islands, the Minister replied that that was a question for the council, and as he was only one of the members, he could not say what they would do. The Minister added, however, that the opinion expressed by the Russian groups in Paris seemed to embody the views of the Governments they represented. If no meeting took place on Princes' Islands it would then be for the council to say what the next step with reference to Russia would be, he said.

Invitation to All Factions.

Concerning the opposition in some quarters to inviting the Russian factions to Princes' Islands, M. Pichon said:

"Evidently that grew out of the assumption that the invitation to all the Russian elements was equivalent to recognition of the Bolshevist Government. But that is not the case. The invitation was to all factions, in an effort to bring them together, and the Bolsheviki among the rest, as they have a de facto existence. There was no intention of recognizing the Bolsheviki or any other faction."

When asked if they were a de facto Government, M. Pinchon answered: "They have a de facto existence, and this has led to their being invited with the others."

Concerning the various interests in Syria and Arabia, M. Pinchon expressed the belief that "all can be reconciled by mutual concession."

In reply to the question as to how long it would be before there was an agreement on the League of Nations, he said: "That is difficult to say before we have a full plan. The drafting will be the work of a committee, and then the conference must pass on the work. But it is evident that there will be an agreement on a common plan."

Speaking of claims for reparation, M. Pichon said that France and all the other countries interested were pre-

PARIS, Jan. 26.—The League of Nations project may now be said to have been fairly launched with the action taken on Saturday at the plenary session of the Peace Conference. The indorsement of the underlying principles of this new and ambitious program for preventing future wars between Governments and peoples insures the formation of some sort of an international organization which, whatever its imperfections may be, is certain to have a deterrent effect on the disposition of nations to resort to hostilities to adjust serious disputes. Those who have been enthusiastic supporters of President Wilson in his advocacy of a society of nations regard Saturday's proceedings at the Qual d'Orsay as making a great advance in civilization and feel that the occasion was historic.

Saturday's plenary session was of prime importance for another reason. The action taken, not only concerning the League of Nations, but with respect to other matters that appeal less to the imagination, means that the Peace Conference has at last settled down to work in a practical way. The detailed accomplishment of plans for bringing peace and content to the world has been left to various commissions and committees composed of those more or less expert in the various lines upon which they will advise or act.

How the Work Is Divided.

The formula for a League of Nations is to be worked out by a commission composed for the most part of men who have been foremost advocates of this method of maintaining the political equilibrium of the world with President Wilson and Colonel House representing the United States.

The ability of the enemy countries to make reparation for the destruction they have caused is to be reported on by a commission of experts, while the questions of the punishment of the ex-Kaiser and his militaristic advirers, the means of ameliorating conditions of labor throughout the world and a scheme of internationalization of ports, waterways and railways are to be examined into by other commissions.

In addition to these, several committees are active in the interest of adjusting matters which, while not relating directly to the negotiation of the peace treaty dovetail into what the Peace Conference seeks to accomplish. The Interallied Food Commission, with Herbert C. Hoover at its head, is one and the commission to ascertain the strength of the German armies, with the object of deciding upon what proportion of the allied forces is to be demobilized, with General Foch as Chairman and General Bliss as the American member, is another. Then there is the committee which arranged with representatives of the Ebert Govern-

CONFERENCE SPEEDING UP

Submission of Peace Preliminaries to French Chamber Before April 1 Predicted.

WILSON'S TRIP TO RHEIMS

Automobile Journey to That City and Chateau-Thierry Started in Snowstorm.

PARIS, Jan. 26, (Associated Press.)—Premier Clemenceau has announced the following committees of the Peace Congress to conduct inquiries and make reports on particular features of the work to be done by the Congress:

Responsibility for the War—Great Britain, Sir Gordon Hewart; France, Captain André Tardieu and Ferdinand Larnaude; Italy, Vittorio Scialoia and Deputy Raimondo.

Reparation—United States, B. M. Baruch, John W. Davis, and Vance McCormick; Great Britain, William Morris Hughes, Sir John Simon, and Baron Cunliffe; France, L. L. Klotz, L. P. Locheur, and A. F. Lebrun; Italy, Antonio Salandra and General Badoglio; Japan, Baron Makino and Baron Nobuaki.

International Labor Legislation—United States, E. N. Hurley and Samuel Gompers; Great Britain, George Nicoll Barnes and Ian Malcolm; France, M. Colliard and L. P. Locheur; Italy, Signor Des Planches and Signor Cabrini; Japan, M. Otichiai and M. Oka.

Regulation of Ports, Waterways, and Railroads—United States, Henry White; Great Britain, Sir John Simon; France, André Voiss and Albert Claveille; Italy, Signor Crespi and Signor de Martino; Japan, M. Yamakawa, and Colonel Sato.

Lansing May Pass on Kaiser's Case.

Robert Lansing, Secretary of State, will be one of the two members of the American committee created yesterday by the Peace Conference to deal with the question of responsibility for the war. The other American representative will probably be one of the experts attached to the mission, who is now preparing the American views on this important question that carries with it the verdict of life or death for the former German Emperor and some of his Generals and Admirals, and even civilian officials.

Although the French Government, through the publication of the opinion of its legal advisers, particularly indorsed the theory that it is within the power of the Peace Conference to try German, Austrian, Turkish, and Bulgarian violators of the laws of warfare, the American Commissioners have not yet disclosed their position. The belief has been expressed, however, that they will be found not much at variance with the French view as to the strict question of legal power, but that they will not commit themselves regarding the policy to be adopted in the exercise of that power.

Pleased with Speed of Conference.

"The belief is expressed in French official circles that the preliminaries for peace will be finished and ready for submission to the French Chamber between March 15 and March 31," says the Paris edition of The Daily Mail.

The speed with which the conference is shaping its organization has brought forth comment from various sources.

"They are going very fast," says the Figaro, dealing with Saturday's session. "Speed seems to have characterized the second plenary session of the Peace Conference."

With much of the final machinery in motion, and with Premier Clemenceau, the permanent Chairman, insisting on business by the conference, observers of the situation express the belief that on the whole the Peace Conference is moving according to schedule. The announcement of the personnel of the various important commissions has added considerably to the belief in the working power of the conference. Some of the newspapers, in commenting on the regularity with which yesterday's session moved, say that it seemed as if the routine had been well rehearsed.

President Wilson and Mrs. Wilson, accompanied by Rear Admiral Grayson and a small party of American and French Generals, left Paris at 8 o'clock this morning by automobile for a visit to the Château-Thierry and Rheims regions.

A heavy snowstorm started at about the same time that President Wilson began his trip to the battle area this morning. The storm covered the entire devastated region.

SENATORS APPROVE PEACE LEAGUE MOVE

Consider Paris Action a Practicable Step—Borah, However, Is Skeptical.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.—The prevailing opinion among Senators expressed today at the Capitol was that the step toward a League of Nations taken by the Peace Conference would achieve tangible results. The action of the conference in providing for committees to work out the fundamentals of the league was generally approved.

The point was emphasized that the outstanding objection to the league, as expressed in the Senate—that it would create an international standing army, and mean conscription for all nations—had been removed. The League of Nations, under the scheme outlined at Versailles, it was argued, would be one of moral, rather than military, force.

It was suggested by one Senator that President Wilson, in approving the league as mapped out by the conference, had abandoned his original idea of military power as an instrument of enforcing the will of the league. The President himself, this Senator suggested, undoubtedly had found it necessary to change his original views after conferring with delegates from the other nations.

The opinion was expressed by more than one Senator that the League of Nations plan evolved by the conference meant, in effect, that there would be broad facility for international arbitration, which would take the place of military force. The league, these Senators said, would be able through a period of negotiation with nations having a grievance to come to an understanding that would be likely to dissipate the possibility of war.

The suggestion that Germany might be kept out of the league was declared by most Senators to be impossible, because of the nature of the action taken by the conference in deciding that the league must be considered as a part of the treaty of peace. Germany, they pointed out, would naturally be a signatory to the treaty and as such would have a voice in voting upon the league project.

Senator Lodge, ranking Republican member of the Foreign Affairs Committee, expressed himself, privately, as regarding the action taken as a move toward a practical League of Nations, although an abandonment of the original scheme as outlined by President Wilson. The Senator's position was regarded here tonight as significant of what the probable action of the Republicans in the Senate would be toward ratification of the league plan, when it came up as a part of the peace treaty.

"I don't want to discuss the matter of the acceptance of the league proposal until I know just what has been accepted," was the only comment Senator Lodge would make publicly.

It is known that Senator Lodge is particularly satisfied with the project of submerging militarism by moral force. He believes that it will go a long way toward preventing war.

Senator Hitchcock, Chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, said that the opponents of the League of Nations as a fundamental principle would now probably shift their attacks to ridicule of it, as an ineffective instrument through lack of power to enforce its will.

"They will probably say that it does not carry force enough to make it practical," said Senator Hitchcock. "But the answer to that is that the moral obligation of the big powers entering the league will offset any lack of military power. The whole purpose of the league will be to maintain peace, and the strong powers in it will see that this is the uppermost influence. Moral suasion of the strong nations will prove as effectual, to my mind, as sterner arguments.

"The action of the conference is eminently satisfactory and indicates progress toward a League of Nations that will have its effect. Whatever the league may lack in the beginning we may count upon it to gain in strength with the passage of time. Undoubtedly the preliminary discussions have long since settled all problems that might have proved stumbling blocks."

Senator Borah of Idaho did not agree with other Senators on the action of the Paris conference. He felt that nothing definite had been accomplished and that the conference had left it to the Committee of Nations to work out the problem. The Idaho Senator thought the League of Nations, through the appointment of committees to thrash it out, had been effectually sidetracked.

"Nothing has been accomplished," said Mr. Borah. "The action of the Peace Conference is precisely similar to that sometimes taken by a convention which it refers a troublesome question, likely to arouse bitterness, to a committee that will smother it."

SWISS IN ECONOMIC CRISIS.

Situation as to Supplies Worse Since Armistice was Signed.

BERNE, Jan. 25.—Switzerland's economic problems, which are said to have been worse since the armistice, will be laid before allied leaders at Paris by M. Grobert-Roussy, Director of the Société Surveillance Suisse, and M. Iteer of the Federal Economic Department, who have been sent to Paris by the Federal Council. It is reported that Switzerland is no longer getting even the small allowance formerly obtained from Germany.

The Swiss representatives will propose the creation of an international coal congress to allot fuel supplies to all countries during the reconstruction period.

Fertilizers are also badly needed by Switzerland.

PARIS, Jan. 24.—It is said that 20,000 silk workers at Basle, Switzerland, soon will be idle unless the Swiss Government is able to establish trade agreements with the Powers.

PICHON IN DOUBT ON RUSSIAN PARLEY

paring data, but it would take some time to arrive at exact figures. The published reports concerning the amount of the claims varied, and it was impossible, the Minister added, to give the exact figures at present.

Territorial questions, he went on, were beginning to be considered now in connection with the various questions before the council. As to the possibility of the discussion of the League of Nations delaying territorial adjustments he said: "Not at all, as the examination of the two questions proceeds along parallel lines."

Relative to the French attitude toward the holding of the left bank of the Rhine, M. Pichon declared that various published reports were premature and more or less incorrect. When his attention was called to remarks which Marshal Foch had recently made on the subject, M. Pichon said: "Marshal Foch spoke in his personal capacity on this subject, and it has not yet been considered here."

With regard to the consideration of disarmament, the Minister said that it was part of the discussion of the League of Nations, but beyond that had not been taken up.

M. Pichon said there was no objection to using the views he had expressed as coming from him, and added that as a former journalist himself he desired to aid his colleagues in every way in the performance of their duties.

DEEPLY IMPRESSED BY WILSON'S SPEECH

Peace Conference Especially Struck by Declaration of American Idealism.

PROTESTS OF LITTLE STATES

Mildly Rebuked by Clemenceau's Reminder of Great Powers' Immense Sacrifices.

By RICHARD V. OULAHAN.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Jan. 25.—Those who went as spectators to the Quai d'Orsay this afternoon, expecting to be thrilled over the session of the open Peace Conference, found much to interest them in seeing the world's most notable assemblage at work, but the only diversion from the rather formal speeches delivered was in a protest made by the smaller nationalities, led by the Belgians, over the limited representation accorded to them on important committees. Outside of that, the session was chiefly interesting in the oral adhesion of four of the five great powers to the principles of the League of Nations.

President Wilson was the spokesman for the United States, and he covered the subject in a way that left no doubt of the enthusiasm of the American peace delegation toward the proposal for an organization among the nations of the world that would undertake to prevent a recurrence of the bloody struggle which ended with the armistice on Nov. 11.

Japan was the only Government of the five powers that control the administration of the Peace Conference which failed to declare its views on the resolutions proposed by the Supreme Council asserting the necessity for the formation of a League of Nations.

These resolutions, whose discussion consumed most of this afternoon's sitting, provided that the league be created as an integral part of the general treaty of peace, and that it "should be open to every civilized nation which can be relied on to promote its objects."

The quoted portions of this paragraph of the resolutions embodies a concession to those nations which are doubtful of the advisability of admitting Germany into the league as a matter of right on the re-establishment of world peace. Under this provision it will be a matter of future determination for the great powers whether Germany has sufficiently retrieved herself in the eyes of the world to deserve admission into the international organization.

Another provision of the resolutions calls for periodical meetings of the league, and for a permanent organization to carry on business in the intervals between its conferences.

Submitted to Plenary Session.

These resolutions were adopted by the Supreme Council composed of the five governing powers and were submitted to the plenary session this afternoon with the council's sanction as a subject for discussion. Premier Clemenceau, who presided at the session, called on President Wilson to open the discussion—a compliment for which the President expressed his appreciation. While his speech was received in silence, in accordance with the practice governing meetings of diplomatic bodies, it evidently made a deep impression on those who heard and understood it.

He emphasized the fact that the peace delegates were assembled not as representatives of Governments, "but as representatives of peoples." This thought, which ran all through his remarks, was that it was the peoples who had suffered, and that they were the most deeply interested in having future wars prevented.

One point which he made which apparently caused much interest among his auditors was that the United States was less likely to suffer from attacks of enemies than other nations, and he argued from this that the ardor of the United States for the Society of Nations was not an ardor springing out of fear or apprehension, but out of ideals "which have come to consciousness in this war." He also gave assurance that America never thought that in coming into the war she was intervening in the politics of Europe or Asia. She was interested only in the cause of liberty and justice. The fortunes of mankind, he said, were now in the hands of the plain people of the whole world. The United States regarded the League of Nations as the keystone of the whole peace program. The American people expected their representatives to be their servants, and in accepting that mandate with the greatest enthusiasm the American delegates would not dare to compromise their championship of the peace of the world.

The President spoke easily and gracefully, without notes. He seldom indulges in any effort at dramatic or oratorical effect, but today his voice was even more subdued than usual. His evident desire was to put a plain statement of his views before the conference, and in trying to adhere to that resolution his quiet tones had a depth of feeling that was perhaps more impressive than a stirring appeal.

When he took his seat—his remarks lasted twenty minutes—Premier Lloyd George arose, and in tones as quiet and subdued as the President's, indorsed the league principle. The active Welshman, who is capable of bursts of eloquence that account to some extent for his hold on the people of the British Isles, seemed to appreciate, like the President, the solemnity of the occasion.

Then Premier Orlando rose to speak. At times he was carried away by enthusiasm and gave the first dramatic touch to the proceedings; but withal his was no oration intended to stir his hearers.

Léon Bourgeois spoke for France. He is the leading French advocate of the formation of a Society of Nations, and the recent assurance from Clemenceau that Bourgeois would be the representative of France on the commission to draw up the league plan was the most encouraging sign yet given that the French Premier was showing any sympathy with Wilson's proposal to form an international organization to prevent wars.

Japan was next on the list of great powers, but, evidently by prior arrangement, M. Clemenceau recognized China, whose representative, Lu Cheng Hsiang, spoke briefly in favor of the league.

Interruption by Premier Hughes.

The even run of the proceedings, while the league project was under consideration, was interrupted when Premier Hughes of Australia asked if there would be an opportunity for general discussion of the league resolutions. He was assured by M. Clemenceau in English that there would be.

After several of the smaller nationalities had expressed themselves in favor of the league, the first diversion of the session occurred through the objection of Belgium to provisions in other resolutions offered by the Supreme Council, limiting the representation of the smaller nationalities on the Conference Committees.

One after another the delegates representing the smaller nations rose to indorse Belgium's objection. Premier Venizelos, who spoke for Greece, attracted most interest. When they were through, they received what amounted to a mild lecture from M. Clemenceau, the burden of which was that they should be thankful that they were there at all. He told them that when the armistice was signed, the five nations which formed the Supreme Council of the conference, and whose program had brought dissent, had 12,000,000 men under arms and could count their dead in millions. Incidentally to his remarks, the grizzled French Premier said he had come to the conference ready to sacrifice many of his own opinions in the interest of harmony and a speedy conclusion of peace.

No action was taken on the League of Nations or the other matters which brought the objection from the delegates of the smaller nationalities. These other matters were embraced in a series of resolutions, one of which provided for a commission composed of two representatives each of the five great powers and five representatives of all other nationalities, to report on responsibility for the war and to suggest how the persons responsible might be punished. Another resolution provided for the appointment of a commission composed of three representatives each of the five great powers and two each from certain smaller nations, to ascertain the amount of reparation which the enemy countries should pay—the amount they were capable of paying—and the method and time of payment.

The American representatives on this commission will be Bernard M. Baruch, Vance McCormick, and Norman Davis, the last named one of the financial experts who has been in Europe for some time. This group will act as expert advisers to the American delegation in all matters relating to the reconstruction of European countries and kindred subjects.

It was announced at the conference that President Wilson and Colonel House would represent the United States on the Interallied Committee to draft a plan for the League of Nations. Lord Robert Cecil and General Smuts will be the British representatives, and Léon Bourgeois one of the French representatives. Premier Orlando will be the chief Italian, and Baron Chinda, the former Japanese Ambassador to the United States, will appear for Japan.

Limited Press Representation.

A limited number of press representatives were admitted to today's session. They were quartered, as at the opening meeting, in a chamber adjoining with a view through the wide portals entering into the Clock Room. The seeing and hearing conditions were not of the best, and, realizing the difficulty on the part of the press of knowing what was going on, President Wilson sent word to the newspapermen, while the objections of the smaller nations were being voiced, that the dissent was to the provision for committee representation, and not to the League of Nations.

At this afternoon's session, President Wilson sat on the right of Clemenceau, while Lloyd George sat at Clemenceau's left. Colonel House, who has recovered from his illness, was present, sitting between Secretary Lansing and Henry White. Marshal Foch sat next to André Tardieu with the French delegates. Among the limited number of spectators, there were Bernard M. Baruch and Ambassador Jusserand. President Wilson was attended by Admiral Grayson in his naval service uniform.

PRAISE WILSON'S ADDRESS.

Paris Papers Pay Tribute to Its Effect Upon the Peace Conference.

PARIS, Jan. 26.—A number of the newspapers today pay tribute to President Wilson's eloquence at yesterday's session of the Peace Conference.

"Everybody knows President Wilson's smile," says the Petit Parisien. "It has charmed Paris, but until yesterday we were ignorant of the great effect its disappearance could produce. Such a contrast, so unexpected, was sufficient to give his discourse rare eloquence."

Stephane Lauzanne, editor of the Matin, says:

"I have heard President Wilson speak numerous times, but never have I heard his voice so beautiful, clear and rich. It was the dream of his life, it was the dream of humanity which that voice announced."

M. Clemenceau's prompt decisions and skilful handling of delicate situations also receives great praise.

"His most vigorous personality was present again," says The Paris Daily Mail, referring to M. Clemenceau. "He kept the closest hold on the proceedings, and when the protest of the minor nations seemed likely to become interminable he put an end to their criticisms in a quick, vigorous speech."

The press is unanimous in praise of those who spoke in favor of a League of Nations at Saturday's meeting of the Peace Conference. The newspapers say the question was tried with laudable sobriety, and that the debates proceeded in the atmosphere of calm courteousness usual at diplomatic conferences.

Of the address of Premier Clemenceau one newspaper says:

"Its diplomatic solemnity allowed applause only at its most telling points, but it was plain that the wise counsels of M. Clemenceau left a deep impression."

Le Matin says that Marshal Foch was silent throughout the meeting of the conference, but that when President Wilson said the American soldiers came "not merely to win a war, but to win a cause," the Marshal showed his approval by nodding his head. The papers call Saturday "League of Nations Day."

BOLSHEVIKI WARY OF CONFERENCE

Paris View That They Fear Deep-Laid Scheme to Get the Better of Them.

THOMAS ASSAILS OFFER

Sending of Tchitcherin Message to Le Populaire Causes French Socialists to be Suspected.

By ERNEST MARSHALL.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Jan. 25.—The Peace Conference's invitation to the various de facto Russian Governments to send representatives to Princes' Island is not receiving a hearty response. Anti-Bolshevist Russians here at once protested against being placed on the same plane as the "traitors of Brest-Litovsk"; and on their side, the Bolsheviki suspect a deep-laid scheme to get the better of them.

The wireless message from Tchitcherin, the Bolshevist Minister of Foreign Affairs, to Vevowski, the Bolshevist representative at Stockholm, has been repeated to the Parisian paper, Le Populaire, with the request that the latter should supply Tchitcherin with information regarding the following points:

First: Is the selection of an island remote from the centres of political activity not designed either to surround the negotiations with secrecy or to create factitious and biased publicity, the choice of the press representatives attending being wholly in the hands of the Entente Powers?

Second: Whether the offer of good offices with a view to arbitration between the warring Russian Governments can be relied upon when it comes from powers which have been supporting "the reactionary governments of Russia" by money, munitions, and men?

No proposal for an armistice, says Tchitcherin, was made while the Soviets were in serious difficulties; but the cessation of hostilities is suggested only when the Bolshevist arms are gaining the upper hand. In regard to this last point it has been stated on high authority here that the Bolshevist army now amounts to 800,000 men, and it is well equipped and well disciplined.

Considerable skepticism exists regarding the undertaking which Litvinoff, formerly the Bolshevist Ambassador in London, is reported to have given that the Bolshevist Government is willing to assume responsibility for the foreign indebtedness of the late Russian Empire. France alone holds scrip of this kind to the amount of nearly $5,000,000,000. One of the earliest acts of the Bolsheviki was to repudiate the foreign debts of Russia, and something more than a vague assurance by Litvinoff that the repudiation policy is to be reversed is required.

All the Paris evening papers make a feature of the Tchitcherin wireless, reprinting it from Le Populaire. The latter is a Socialist journal, edited by Jean Longuet, and some of its contemporaries regard Tchitcherin's message to Le Populaire as a clear proof that the French Socialists of the Longuet brand are in league with the Russian Bolsheviki.

Meanwhile the Conference's approaches to the Bolshevist Government are not getting any better press notices here.

Speculation is very busy on the point of the present attitude vis à vis Russia with what Parisians are now calling the directory of the Conference—that is, Wilson and Lansing and the Premiers and Foreign Secretaries of the four great allied powers.

One theory developed is that Lloyd George has skilfully cast off his own shoulders the responsibility for the British move which was so categorically rejected by French Foreign Minister Pichon, and that the French Government on their side realized that the maintenance of an uncompromising attitude could help toward a solution. President Wilson, with the full courage of his conviction, had no hesitation in taking upon himself the direction of the policy which Lloyd George personally was in sympathy with and which the French view as an interesting experiment to which they could at least extend benevolent adhesion.

The Journal des Débats writes almost despairingly of the Peace Conference's action toward the Russian problem, declaring it a "fatality that the associated diplomatists are reserving their tenderness for scoundrels and criminals." While refusing to listen to "authentic revolutionaries" like Bourtzeff and Savinkoff and men like Sazonoff and Lvoff, "the Conference," cries the Débats, "remains deaf to the protests of these men. It abandons itself to its dreams. And yet it calls itself practical."

This, of course, might be read as a fling at President Wilson, but is possibly no nearer the truth than the cynical suggestion that Wilson's contribution to the Prince's Island plan was the selection of the island.

PARIS, Jan. 26. (Associated Press.)—The general opinion expressed this evening is that the wireless message sent yesterday by M. Tchitcherin, Minister of Foreign Affairs of the Soviet Government in Russia, is the only direct expression provoked thus far by the Peace Conference's wireless invitation to the Russian factions, and that this fact must be taken as indicating that the final attitude of the Bolshevist Government is hostile to a meeting under the conditions proposed.

It is regarded possible that a more formal reply will be received from the Bolsheviki, but the dissatisfaction expressed by the Soviet Commissioner for Foreign Affairs is considered as amounting to a rejection of the invitation.

It was indicated by Stephen Pichon, the French Foreign Minister, in an interview today, that it rests with the Supreme Council to decide upon the course to be followed in case the Princes Islands meeting is abandoned. It is declared that the Supreme Council will not consent to hold the meeting anywhere where the Bolsheviki will have an opportunity to indulge in speeches calculated to spread their doctrine among the peoples of the Entente countries and the United States.

Such opinions as could be gathered today in Paris regarding the probable course to be pursued were to the effect that the Supreme Council will adopt a waiting policy. It was considered certain by those who gave opinions on the situation that the powers could not be brought to undertake a joint military expedition in Russia in force now, if at all.

THOMAS DEPLORES MOVE.

French Socialist ex-Minister Calls Invitation to Reds a Mistake.

By WALTER DURANTY.

Copyright, 1919, by The New York Times Company.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Jan. 25.—"By inviting the Russians to the Princes' Islands the Paris Conference is abdicating its own authority. The proposal is weak and dilatory. It is a proceeding unworthy of the League of Nations," said former Minister Albert Thomas today. Though a Socialist, M. Thomas has always been an ardent win-the-war patriot, who refused to accept the compromise peace policy of that section of the Socialist organization which gained control last Summer, and has since shaped the party's attitude.

In accordance with the Socialist veto, he declined to take office in the Clemenceau Cabinet, but retained his own independence to the extent of withholding all his sympathies from Bolshevism or any change in existing social conditions by methods of violence. He is a confirmed partisan of the League of Nations, but as a man of action rather than of words or vague ideals; he demands practical application instead of theoretical good intentions. It is on this basis that he criticises the Princes' Island scheme. He continued:

"If the League of Nations is to amount to anything, as I devoutly hope it will, it must take a definite stand regarding the problems to be settled, and not merely adopt an attitude of 'wait and see.' Before the Princes' Island suggestion was made I advocated in a French newspaper communication on the part of the Paris conference with the Russians—Bolsheviki and others—rather than armed intervention or support by arms, munitions and money, of any parties in the Russian conflict. But I didn't mean by that that we should invite the Russians to a sort of inquiry court, where they would all be on the same footing and wherefrom—even in the somewhat unlikely event of their general acceptance—little can result save further verbiage and chaos of conflicting theories and cross-accusations.

"No; what the conference should have done, as the de facto if not yet thoroughly organized executive of the League of Nations, was to address the Russians a statement of the conditions which they—and by they I mean all the parties—were required by the League of Nations to fulfill.

"For the Bolsheviki that would involve cessation of hostilities and terrorism and liberty of speech and press. The same would apply to the other Governments in Russia. The conference would have judged the diverse parties by their refusal or acceptance and taken action accordingly. If the Bolsheviki declined, the League of Nations would have had a clear conscience in setting in action against them not only all means of aid to their opponents, but the international police force."

"In plain English, then," I interrupted, "you mean that if the Bolsheviki had been defiant the League of Nations would have had to undertake armed intervention in Russia?"

But M. Thomas would not go that far. He talked somewhat vaguely about assistance to non-Bolshevist elements and "the creation of points of refuge" for victims of the Bolshevist tyranny, but he declined to admit that, logically speaking, an "international police operation" and military intervention were different in form but the same in fact.

There lies the real crux of the whole Russian problem. Suppose the Bolshevist lion goes to the Princes' Islands and lies down in genuine amity with the Omsk, Odessa, or Archangel lamb; then there will be no more trouble. But if, as seems more probable, the Bolsheviki refuse any compromise—as they might have refused the allied conditions had the Thomas idea been followed—what will happen then? If the League of Nations is to have any value it must be able to enforce its rulings. And in the Russian case, that would mean armed intervention—however one terms it—against which the conference seems determined.

BRITISH REGRET WILSON MUST LEAVE

By Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Jan. 26.—A. G. Gardiner, writing in The Daily News on impressions he gathered during a trip to Paris, whence he has just returned, says:

"Not the least happy impression one gets in Paris is that of the perfect harmony that exists between the English and American elements. There is no harm now in saying that there was a time when the spirit was not quite satisfactory—when there was a suspicion on the American side that our aims were not wholly disinterested. That has entirely vanished, and mutual confidence prevails in the fullest degree.

"This is due in part to the closer intercourse of the last two months and in part, no doubt, to the remarkable influence of President Wilson. His serene and powerful personality is pervading the atmosphere of negotiation with the spirit of wisdom and urbanity and is providing a solvent for all sorts of difficulties. He has in a rare degree the faculty of winning the heart, as well as of convincing the mind, and the detachment of America from the old European jungle and its freedom from any suspicion of self interest add to the weight of his personal influence.

"I have reason to know that his departure for America on urgent Congressional business in March is a subject of anxious regret in British circles, and that his return is anxiously hoped for.

"There is, I found, another source of disquiet on the subject of America. It is notorious that there is a considerable body of opinion in the United States in favor of withdrawal when the conference has completed its work and the return to the Washington tradition of isolation. The idea is that America entered the war for a special purpose, and that having completed the task it should wash its hands of European affairs, it is argued, which makes a strong appeal to American sentiment. It fears being caught in the whirlpool of the external world.

"It likes to feel that it has been in the war without any interest of its own to serve. Moreover, experience in the Philippines has not encouraged it to seek more overseas tasks.

"All this makes the movement respectable and formidable, but I found the gravest concern on the subject in the most responsible British circles. It is felt that the withdrawal of America from any share of trusteeship of the league would be fatal. Europe has suffered a catastrophe the measure of which is only beginning to be understood. The work of rebuilding the fabric of European society will occupy years and will need all the resources of civilization. It is to America we have to look not only for disinterested motive but for unexhausted power.

"If the redemption of Europe is left to Europe the main burden will fall on this country, and our resources have gone with the rest. We should not be able to carry the burden and might, like America, have to return to our old policy of isolation, leaving the continent to flounder at the mercy and become the prey of some new military ambition, and in the end the tragedy of the last five years would be repeated and we should have to begin again where we are today.

"If that danger is to be avoided and if the League of Nations is to be not a pathetic memorial of good intentions but an enduring reality, America must stand in with Europe and see the thing through.

"I do not think the President has any doubt on the subject. He understands that the Washington tradition was the expression of true wisdom in the past, but it no longer fits conditions of the world. We can none of us—neither countries nor hemispheres—live in isolation again. The world is one and indivisible and, much as it may dislike overseas responsibilities, and much as it may wish to be left, in Voltaire's phrase, 'to cultivate its garden,' America must take its full share in helping the Old World out of the pit into which it has fallen.

"It has helped us to throw off the old despotism, but that is only a part of the task and the least part. Now we have to find a new way of life, and America must help to heal the world that she has helped to deliver.

"I think that all schemes of the League, including the American, provide that the non-self-governing parts of the world shall each be administered by a mandatory power responsible to the League. The idea of a condominium is dismissed as impracticable and repudiated by experience. America can do no better service than by assuming its share of this responsibility and giving the world the example of disinterested trusteeship."

FINANCE ISSUE LOOMS AT PARIS

By RICHARD V. OULAHAN.

ment for the lease of German merchant ships to carry troops and food. All these and a few more are doing work of great importance that will have a bearing on the decisions of the peace conference.

Getting the World Back to Normal.

In the opinion of most of the American official representatives, these business bodies are quite as necessary to a proper conclusion of peace as the Peace Conference itself. They are forced to adopt this view of a relationship between the financial, business, and industrial readjustments of Europe and provisions of a purely military character.

More and more it has been impressed upon American officials here that the best way to get the world back to normal conditions is to put an end to everything that suggests war, and with that thought in mind they are seeking to arrange side agreements separate from the peace treaty that will start business going again on a firm foundation.

It is realized by these Americans upon whom President Wilson is depending for advice and suggestion that Europe "is all shot to pieces" by more than four years of fighting and bloodshed. Their sympathy has been aroused by the suffering to which France and other Continental countries have been subjected, and they are not unmindful of the tremendous effort Great Britain has made, which entailed sacrifices to an extent not appreciated perhaps by the other Allies.

The United States has loaned immense sums of money to some of the associated Governments to carry on the war, and these Governments still believe it is essential to their future happiness that our Government shall continue to advance loans during the period of readjustment.

But here there is a divergence between the American and foreign view. It is felt by the American representatives that the best method of readjustment is to have the nations which have suffered most by the ravages of war undertake their own salvation—that is, begin to re-establish themselves on a self-supporting basis instead of getting direct governmental help from Washington.

To put the matter bluntly, our representatives take the view that the sooner Europe goes to work the better it will be for Europe.

Want Us to Share Whole Burden.

Take, for example, the suggestions that have been put before American officials here in a way to indicate that they are intended to be taken seriously, that the United States consider itself as having been in the war since August, 1914, and agree to take over a proportionate share of the expenses incurred by the other Allies in fighting the Central Powers during the period of more than four years. Our officials are satisfied that American public opinion will not tolerate placing any such additional expense on the American people.

The argument advanced to back up these suggestions, which come from more than one European ally, is that the United States, while it did not enter the war until April, 1917, made large amounts out of sales of munitions and food to the Allied Governments prior to that time, and fairly reveled in a prosperity that places it in a position to show the most generous spirit. Furthermore, it is advanced that the United States entered the war for idealistic reasons and can afford to make sacrifices as evidence of the good faith of that idealism.

Opinion among the American representatives seems to set in opposition to these views so that it almost goes without saying that the proposal to have the American Treasury take over a part of the European war debt for the period before we entered the war will not be adopted.

A very general view among American officials in Paris who have been considering the matter is that the reconstruction of warworn Europe can best be accomplished by obtaining the needed financial assistance through private rather than through governmental means.

A case in point involves loans which one European Government is seeking to obtain from the United States Treasury to revive industry. American financial experts whose views are relied upon by the President for guidance hold that it would be unfair to the taxpayers of the United States to have their money advanced to a European Government which in turn would loan it to private individuals to enable them to begin industrial work anew.

Where America Would Suffer

The effect of such a policy would be that foreign industry would get capital at the lowest rate of interest, while American business men, who would be in competition with this foreign industry, would be compelled to obtain capital at much higher rates of interest from the private money market and at the same time have contributed through their payments of taxes to capital which foreign industry was using to compete with them. Any such arrangement, it is contended by the American representatives here, would cause dissatisfaction at home, and rightly so.

Those men upon whom the President most relies for advice in connection with financial and industrial affairs connected with the war seem to be generally of the opinion that the first advance toward bringing Europe back to normal conditions will come through the release of capital from private and not Government sources. They insist that there is plenty of money to be had to rehabilitate industry in Europe if assurances are obtained that it will be used in industrial activities that will bring results, and thus provide means of repayment.

American financial interests, it is said, are ready to advance capital and supplies on easy credits. It is argued further that once industry is revived in Europe on a self-supporting basis normal conditions will be resumed and means provided for making the countries which have suffered most from hostilities self-supporting and prosperous.

All this means that it is doubtful if the United States Government will make any considerable loans hereafter to any allied nation. Rather it will urge that money for reconstruction and rehabilitation be obtained from private sources which will be ready to advance it if assured that it will be used for the purposes for which it is advanced.

People Stopped and Searched for Arms — No Outbreaks Are Reported.

BERLIN, Jan. 25, (via Copenhagen.)—Contrary to all expectations, the funeral of Dr. Karl Liebknecht and thirty other Spartacides killed in the recent riots passed today without serious disturbances. The military had prepared so extensively for all eventualities that the rebellious elements had no chance whatever.

Again the streets in the centre of Berlin looked like military camps, field guns having been posted at the Brandenburger Gate, in Potsdamer Platz, Unter den Linden, and the newspaper district, while machine guns were numerous at all street corners. The weather being raw, soldiers wore fur lined greatcoats and at meal times were fed from the so-called goulash cannon.

The inner city from the Tiergarten to the Royal and Jerusalemer Strasse, from Koch Strasse to Unter den Linden was entirely under military control. Traffic was completely stopped, the subway trains passing five stations within the districts outlined without stopping.

At points of special strategic importance appeared again those signs commanding pedestrians, "Stop or you will be shot." The people certainly stopped, but after a superficial search for arms were permitted to proceed.

If the military hoped to prevent by this means the accumulation of large masses, they failed completely, for seldom have Berlin's streets been crowded as they were today. Doubtless the expectation of witnessing another Spartacide revolt brought out the enormous masses of sightseers, but the Spartacides were evidently in no humor for fighting.

Some of them had not learned that the Government had prohibited the formation of the funeral procession in the Siegesallee. At the last minute they came with tremendous wreaths, especially delegations from Halle, Magdeburg, Bremen, Hamburg, and Düsseldorf. They indignantly but fruitlessly protested against being searched for arms, and were then conducted out of harm's way by the soldiers, to meet again at Luetzowplatz.

There no soldiers appeared, but thousands of Spartacides and tens of thousands of sightseers gathered, when Frau Luisa Zieh addressed in true Spartacide style, proving that Rosa Luxemburg's spirit was not dead.

About noon the procession moved toward the Friedrichshain morgue, where thirty-one black coffins on nine black wagons awaited. Without further ceremony the procession, now numbering about 40,000 persons, accompanied by two bands, proceeded to the Friedrichsfelde Cemetery, taking three hours in passing.

Liebknecht's body was carried on a separate wagon, the coffin being buried under giant wreaths. Other wagons, too, were loaded to the almost with flowers.

At the cemetery one large grave had been prepared for all the dead Spartacides. Liebknecht's body was placed first in the grave, while a chorus sang a Spartacide hymn, Liebknecht's wife and two sons looking on.

There was some astonishingly tame speechmaking, whereupon the bodies of the other thirty followed Liebknecht's into the grave and the large gathering quietly dispersed.

MINISTERS IN DISCORD OVER CONSTITUTION

Eisner Quits Berlin Gathering After Rebuff—Prussian Partition Causes Dispute.

BERLIN, Jan. 26, (via Copenhagen.)—Representatives of all the German States met in Berlin yesterday, with Premier Ebert presiding, to discuss proposals for the new constitution.

Herr Ebert, in an altercation with Bavaria's representatives, Jaffe and Eisner, made it quite clear that the gathering had no power to transact any decisive business concerning the subject of discussion and could only recommend its views to the National Convention, which alone has the power to say what Germany's future form of state shall be. About 100 representatives were present, among them some Ministers of the South German States.

State Secretary Preuss enlarged on his demand that old royal Prussia must be partitioned, according to his memorandum coupled with his proposed constitution, because in modern Germany, he said, there was no room for a hegemony like that of the Hohenzollerns' creation. Only those who at heart wished old Prussia preserved, he asserted, opposed her partition and also wished the amalgamation of smaller States. It was to be deplored that the reactionary party seemed to propose the partition of Prussia as a campaign issue and represented the underlying motives in a false light. Even his own partisans, the Democrats, Dr Preuss said, had been fooled into blowing the reactionaries' horn.

Then Eisner arose with a proposition to eliminate the Preuss draft entirely from the discussion and substituted his own. He said that he spoke in the name of all the South German States, as well as Saxony and Hesse. Immediately the representatives of the States named protested, explaining that they wished to support the Eisner draft only if the Preuss plan proved impracticable. The Bavarian Prime Minister then retired in disgust.

The Prussian Prime Minister, Herr Hirsch, admitted that a new grouping of German States was absolutely necessary, but he said that the Preuss draft aimed to accomplish this entirely at the cost of Prussia and for the benefit of the South German States. Herr Hirsch favored one undivided German republic with only one Government, but doubted that the federative spirit of the German tribes would permit this.

Little Anhalt's representative, Herr Heine, rose immediately, declaring that his country desired no amalgamation with any other State, but hoped to join the German federation as an independent State, which it had always been.

There was much more of what Germans call "Partikularismus," and the meeting adjourned until Monday without any tangible results.

Most of the newspapers express satisfaction with Eisner's defeat. It is mooted that his draft provides that certain parts of Upper Prussia shall be embodied in Bavaria, Württemberg and Baden, and that Saxe and Hesse are to be enlarged at Prussia's cost.

Both those who favor Prussia's partition and those who oppose it hope that the national convention will take their view, and they deplore the present discussion, which may only prejudice the delegates. Meanwhile Gerter, President of the Brunswick Republic, today opened in that capital a congress which is to decide on the erection of a "republic of northwestern Germany."

TROOPS TO GUARD CONVENTION

Weimar Prepares to Send Out News —How Hohenzollerns Voted.

LONDON, Jan. 26, (Associated Press.)—Weimar, the capital of Saxe-Weimar, is preparing a great reception for the German National Assembly under the direction of Councilor Schutz of Berlin, a member of the Reichstag.

Telegraph and telephone communication with the rest of Europe has been increased greatly. Extra employes have been engaged in order to facilitate the dissemination of news of the deliberations of the Assembly, especially to Paris.

The residence of the former Grand Duke of Saxe-Weimar and the National Theatre have been requisitioned for the conference. The local garrison of Weimar has been increased in order to prevent possible trouble with Spartacide and Bolshevist agitators.

Full returns from the German elections of Jan. 19, received in Geneva, show that the Majority Socialists polled 11,112,450 votes, or 39.3 per cent. of the total number cast; the Democrats 5,552,930, or 19.5 per cent.; the Christian People's Party, formerly the Centrists, 3,338,804, or 18.8 per cent., and the National Party 2,739,196, or 9.62 per cent.

The Independent Socialist vote was but 7.68 per cent. of the total for the country, or 2,188,305. The People's Party cast the smallest vote of any of the larger organizations, its total numbering 1,106,408, or 3.9 per cent. The remainder of the votes was cast by smaller party organizations.

The members of the Hohenzollern family, both male and female, who are at present in Potsdam, voted in the elections last Sunday. Each of them designated himself or herself as "Von Hohenzollern," giving also a title as Prince or Princess of Prussia, except August Wilhelm, the former Emperor's fourth son, who styled himself "August Hohenzollern, ex-Prince of Prussia."

A German wireless dispatch gives an interview with Philip Scheidemann, Foreign Secretary in the Ebert Government, in connection with the German elections. Scheidemann asserted that although the Social Democrats had not obtained an absolute majority, they would always be the decisive power within the government, and that in future elections radicalism would lose even more of its supporters.

Scheidemann assumed that on many questions co-operation between the bourgeois Democracy and the Social Democracy would be possible, and that it would be the special task of the assembly to establish a truly Democratic constitution. In keeping with modern demands, which must leave room for the carrying out of Socialism to its fullest extent.

The Foreign Secretary was emphatic in the statement that Germany's acceptance of an ideal League of Nations did not mean that she was willing to commit suicide by allowing whole sections of the country, with unmistakably German populations, to be wrested from the nation, as seemingly was intended by the Poles.

Kurt Eisner, the Bavarian Premier, in a speech at Munich, according to the Cologne Gazette, voiced disappointment over the results of the German elections.

"Clericalism is threatening Bavaria," said Eisner. "Junkerism reigns in Prussia, which is already warring against the Poles. Ludendorff rules in Berlin. Such a state of affairs is intolerable. It is disgraceful that even a meeting of workmen in Munich received the news of the death of Dr. Karl Liebknecht and Rosa Luxemburg with cheers."

In the recent Bavarian elections the Eisner party and the Independent Socialists secured only four of the 156 delegates, while the Majority Socialists won 50 seats and the combined bourgeois party 102. Of the total vote of 2,750,000 the Eisner party received only about 75,000.

PRUSSIAN PARTITION ISSUE AT ELECTION

Socialists May Control State Assembly — Big Display of Posters in Berlin.

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMY OF OCCUPATION, Jan. 26, (Associated Press.)—Voting for delegates to the Prussian State Assembly took place today in the region occupied by the Americans. There was no disorder and no indication of Bolshevist influence.

It was just one week since the election of delegates to the German National Assembly, and today's results here were similar. The indications are that the old Centrist, or Christian People's Party, is leading. This is easily accounted for by the strong support of the Church in the Rhineland, although the Social Democratic Party also has polled heavily.

Reports from the interior concerning the entire Prussian vote indicate that there is a possibility of the Majority Socialists receiving a majority in the Prussian Assembly.

The instructions to the American troops today were identical with those of last Sunday. They were ordered to be merely onlookers and to prevent disorder.

BERLIN, Jan. 25, (via Copenhagen, Jan. 26.)—Interest in the election of the Prussian State Convention lags behind that of the National Convention despite the fact that many very impressive posters which were finished too late for last Sunday's election are being used now.

The National Party is spending enormous sums for such propaganda in the centre of the city, but displays little knowledge of effective electioneering. One poster shows a silhouette of Frederick the Great with the words underneath. "Don't forget the Spirit of Prussia," which appeal to the reactionaries is certainly superfluous, while on all other persons it can have only an effect the contrary of what is desired.

Another colored poster shows a red spectre in a red chariot drawn by galloping horses on the brink of a sea of blood. "Who is going to save Germany from extinction? The German National People's Party," reads the legend underneath.

A third poster asks "Who is going to save Germany's eastern provinces?" A picture of a general in field uniform, unmistakably resembling Hindenburg, adorns this poster, but the Field Marshal's name is not mentioned. Instead there is a line: "Vote for the German National People's Party."

There are at least a dozen more of these posters, but despite their energetic propaganda the vote for the three reactionary parties, the People's Party, the Christian People's Party, and the National People's Party, will be less, it is predicted, than last Sunday because many who voted for them owing to their name of "People's Parties" have since changed their minds.

Otherwise the result of the election seems likely to be very much the same as last Sunday's—the Majority Socialists and Democrats dividing what the three People's Parties will lose. The State convention is not likely to be convoked until the national convention is finished.

BERLIN, Jan. 25, (Associated Press.)—The overshadowing issue of the Prussian State elections, which are to be held tomorrow, has suddenly, almost overnight, become the question of the division of Prussia into several States.

The Vossische Zeitung recently reported that the proposed National Assembly contemplated dividing Prussia into eight States. The next day the official news agency issued a statement, inspired by the Government, that the newspaper's statement was without foundation.

The publication on the same day of the memorial accompanying the proposed Constitution demonstrated, however, that, while the denial was correct, it was disingenuous, as Paragraph XI. of the Constitution permits the formation of new States within the empire "without regard to former State boundaries."

The Conservatives, Clericals, and National Liberals seized on this paragraph as a campaign issue against the Socialists and the German Democrats. The Democrats, however, declared on Thursday that they were opposed to the division of Prussia. Today it was announced that Hugo Preuss, Minister of the Interior, who is an authority on the Constitution and also Democratic candidate for the Assembly in Berlin, probably would not accept the mandate if elected. This leaves the Socialists isolated as defenders of the eventual division of Prussia and may conceivably affect the result of the elections.

CONFER IN BERLIN TO CURB DISORDER

cides alleged that they had been sent by the Bremen Soldiers' Council to requisition arms and munitions stored on the island.

The German Government has large stores of dried vegetables at Bremen, which must be preserved for feeding the German people. Fear that the irresponsible persons now ruling Bremen might destroy these stores if pressed has so far prevented the Berlin Government from taking decisive measures to end the reign of terror in that city.

The old clothes mender, Oerter, who is President of the Republic of Brunswick, is still defying the Berlin Government, stopping Government troops passing through Brunswick, and doing his best to bring about a disruption of the relations between Brunswick and the rest of Germany. Nobody would be very much surprised if Oerter and his Prime Minister, a former juggler performing at cafés, declared war.

Meanwhile he is punishing Brunswick's bourgeois inhabitants for the "murder of Liebknecht and Rosa Luxemburg" by a three days' general strike, prohibiting any traffic or work whatever, permitting only officials in the streets and public buildings. All of Brunswick's newspapers have been occupied by Oerter's myrmidons for three days. Not even the proprietors and editors have been allowed to enter the buildings.

In Hamburg and Leipsic, too, the Spartacides seem to be getting the upper hand again.

Meantime Die Freiheit warns of a reactionary movement among the officers of the cavalry guard, who helped to suppress the Spartacide rebellion. If names go for anything, they certainly would seem suspicious classes, but that is all that can be said against them so far.

Managers of the Schichaus Works at Dantzig, interviewed by telephone, deny the sale of the works. They say that some mysterious Entente agents have been at work spreading rumors concerning them, for what reasons they cannot explain.

To Tackle Unemployment Problem.

By LEONARD SPRAY.

Copyright, 1919, by The New York Times Company.
Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

ROTTERDAM, Jan. 24.—It is semi-officially stated in the Berlin newspapers today that the Government is about to take radical measures with regard to unemployment. While in the country agricultural production is endangered by the fact that there is a shortage, estimated at 600,000, of workers in the towns hundreds of thousands of men are idling.

It is expected that the Government will begin by withdrawing financial support from all who without good reason refuse to work. If this be not successful sharper measures, which are already under discussion, will be taken.

Meantime the Berlin Zeitung am Mittag reports that in the capital public safety is becoming more and more endangered.

"No night passes," says the paper, "without shops being plundered, generally in the centre of the city. Armed bands of robbers, mostly in uniform, break in, threaten the occupants with revolvers and proceed to plunder. These thieves are becoming more and more daring. They even try to shut off whole streets while their fellow-criminals go about plundering unhindered.

"Every day hundreds of thousands of marks' worth of property is stolen. Yesterday thieves in sailors' uniforms plundered a shop and had loaded their booty onto a military motor lorry when two civilian guards appeared on the scene. The sailors seised them, threw them into the lorry and were just driving off when some armed Government soldiers arrived.

"The sailors denounced the two civilian guards as thieves, and having handed them over to the Government soldiers themselves drove away with their booty to the value of 100,000 marks."

ENTENTE TROOPS TO AID GEN. DUTOFF

Small Anglo-French Force to Help Cossacks Hold Orenburg Against the Reds.

GARRISON WITHOUT RIFLES

Trip of 200 Miles Through Country Swarming with Wolves to be Made on Sleds.

OMSK, Jan. 24, (Associated Press.)—Small contingents of French and British troops will be sent to the assistance of General Dutoff at Orenburg, negotiations between the Omsk Government and the Allies having been successfully completed. General Dutoff has telegraphed that he will hold Orenburg as long as possible.

[A dispatch from London on June 23 said an unconfirmed report of the capture of Orenburg by the Bolsheviki had been received in official circles.]

The trip of the allied soldiers to Orenburg will be somewhat perilous, because to reach that place they must make a sled journey of nearly 200 miles across the country swarming with wolves, which have multiplied because huntsmen there are without ammunition.

Advices from Orenburg state that many of General Dutoff's men are without rifles, but do terrible execution in Bolshevist ranks by charging with sabres.

Packs of ravenous wolves infest the district about Omsk, attacking and devouring cattle, and even men are in danger outside of the city.

It is reported that Bolshevist forces plan to recapture Perm, which was taken from them last month by General Gaida's Siberian and Czechoslovak troops. The only real arsenal in the Ural regional at Perm, the former Russian Government refusing to establish arsenals in Siberia.

France and Great Britain have notified Admiral Kolchak, head of the Omsk Government, that they consider the acceptance by Foreign Minister Sazonoff of plans for unity of command and the settlement of the railroad question as signalizing closer ties between the forces fighting the Bolsheviki in Siberia. While there is no official recognition accorded as yet, it is apparent that the powers, including America, have a tendency to look on the Omsk régime as a strong de facto government.

A number of high allied officers are understood to favor vigorous Japanese intervention, believing that the future of the country depends upon military successes and the quick destruction of Bolshevism. National Socialists, on the other hand, have sent a memorial to Admiral Kolchak, pledging their adherence and expressing the belief that his Government alone is capable of saving the country, nationally and internationally.

Newspapers urge American capitalists to invest in projects in Siberia, saying that closer economic ties with America are desired. Reports show that there is a heavy demand for American goods among the people here, delays in shipments leading to anxious inquiries. Co-operative associations have been formed to handle and distribute shipments received. The Government wants to establish distributing points at Omsk and Vladivostok.

There has been a distinct improvement in order here recently. Up until last month hardly a morning passed without several bodies being found in the streets. Although there have been no recent tragedies, however, pedestrians are usually armed and hardly ever go out alone at night.

BERLIN EXPECTS WAR WITH BOLSHEVIKI SOON

Actively Preparing to Combat an Invasion from Russia in the Spring.

BERLIN, Jan. 24, (Associated Press.)—The Neue Berliner Zeitung says it learns that the Government is actively occupied with military preparations for an expected Bolshevist invasion early in the Spring and that it expects to receive the necessary added authority from the National Assembly to mobilize two effective armies which are to be sent to East Prussia and Silesia.

The present preparations are confined to the reorganization of volunteer battalions, some of which are financed privately owing to the financial straits of the Government. The German Army will also be called on to protect troops returning from the Near East by way of the Ukraine.

One of the chief difficulties being encountered is the disinclination of officers to re-enlist because of the treatment they received in the early days of the revolution.

The newspaper says that the campaign to protect the eastern border from Russian invasion will be under the general direction of Field Marshal von Hindenburg, whose headquarters has not yet been moved from Cassel on account of the alleged opposition of the Soldiers' Councils in the west to the proposed campaign.

Jan. 23.—The Bolshevist telegraphic agency Rosta, which was raided at the time of the Spartacide rebellion, had a staff of seventy persons, including many women, all of whom were drawing liberal salaries. The payroll was headed by Former Police Chief Eichhorn, with 1,000 marks monthly. Eichhorn's wife drew 400 marks a month, while she also was on the city's payroll as her husband's assistant at police headquarters.

While the Rosta ostensibly was a news exchange, an investigation has revealed the fact that it was carrying on elaborate propagandist activities.

APPEAL AGAINST REDS.

Anti-Bolshevist Governments Ask Allies for Help and Justice.

PARIS, Jan. 24.—The Governments of Siberia, the Caucasus, and the Crimea have addressed to the Russian representatives gathered in Paris a declaration to be presented to the allied and associated Governments. It is in the form of an appeal for help and justice.

The declaration recapitulates recent events in Russia and sets forth that the anti-Bolshevist forces are fighting for their country, for true liberty, and for a broad democracy based on the same principles and ideals for which the Allies entered the present war.

The Bolsheviki, on the other hand, are declared to have repudiated their country and established a reign of terror with the object of extending it throughout the world. The Bolsheviki, the declaration adds, are a small minority which has succeeded in imposing a tyrannical system by violence.

The Governments, in addressing the allied and associated Governments, say that they are equally against past and present autocracy and that they are only aiming to establish throughout Russia a modern, progressive, and enlightened form of government, granting to all racial, sects, cultural freedom on the broadest lines, thus insuring the widest possible autonomy and the maintenance of the unity of the nation.

TROTZKY NOT CAPTURED.

Reds, After Narva Defeat, Moving on Libau—British Squadron There.

LONDON, Jan. 26.—A dispatch to the Exchange Telegraph from Copenhagen, quoting advices received from Reval, are to the effect that Leon Trotzky, the Bolshevist Minister of War and Marine, succeeded in escaping from Narva, before that town was captured, but that a regiment of the Red Guard and a number of its officers were made prisoner.

The dispatch adds the Reds killed the bourgeoise who remained in Narva, and also the entire populations of surrounding villages, owing to the inability of the people to pay the heavy taxes imposed on them.

The Bolsheviki are advancing against Libau, which, according to report, will be defended by the British squadron there.

A Basle dispatch Friday reported that Trotzky did not make his escape from Narva, while previously an Esthonian official report said he had escaped from the city.

PRESIDENT HOPEFUL OF WORLD SUFFRAGE

FULL TEXT OF HIS SPEECH

He Declares the Women of France Have Borne the Chief Burden of the War.

PARIS, Jan. 25.—The text of President Wilson's address to a delegation representing the workingwomen of France, who called on him today at the Murat Mansion to urge that the Peace Conference include woman suffrage among the points to be settled by the conference, follows:

"Mlle. Thomson and Ladies: You have not only done me a great honor, but you have touched me very much by this unexpected tribute, and may I add that you have frightened me, because, realizing the great confidence you place in me, I am led to the question of my own ability to justify that confidence?

"You have not placed your confidence wrongly in my hopes and purposes, but perhaps not all of those hopes and purposes can be realized in the great matter that you have so much at heart—the right of women to take their full share in the political life of the nations to which they belong. That is necessarily a domestic question for the several nations. A conference of peace settling the relations of nations with each other would be regarded as going very much outside its province if it undertook to dictate to the several States what their internal policy should be.

"At the same time these considerations apply also to the conditions of labor; and it does not seem to be unlikely that the conference will take some action by way of expressing its sentiments, at any rate with regard to the international aspects at least of labor, and I should hope tht some occasion might be offered for the case not only of the women of France, but of their sisters all over the world, to be presented to the consideration of the conference.

"The conference is turning out to be a rather unwieldy body, a very large body representing a great many nations, large and small, old and new, and the method of organizing its work successfully, I am afraid, will have to be worked out stage by stage. Therefore I have no confident prediction to make as to the way in which it can take up questions of this sort.

"But what I have most at heart today is to avail myself of this opportunity to express my admiration for the women of France and my admiration for the women of all the nations that have been engaged in the war. By consensus of this war the chief burden has fallen upon the women of France, and they have borne it with a spirit and a devotion which have commanded the admiration of the world.

"I do not think that the people of France fully realize, perhaps, the intensity of the sympathy that other nations have felt for them. They think of us in America, for example, as a long way off. And we are in space, but we are not in thought. You must remember that the United States is made up of the nations of Europe; that French sympathies run straight across the seas, not merely by historic association, but by blood connection, and that these nerves of sympathy are quick to transmit the impulses of the one nation to the other.

"We have followed your sufferings with a feeling that we were witnessing one of the most heroic, and, may I add, at the same time, satisfactory things in the world—satisfactory because it showed the strength of the human spirit, the indomitable power of women and men alike to sustain any burden if the cause was great enough.

"In an ordinary war there might have been some shrinking, some sinking of effort; but this was not an ordinary war. This war is a war not only to redeem France from an enemy, but to redeem the world from an enemy. And France, therefore, and the women of France strained their hearts to sustain the world. I hope that the strain has not been in vain. I know that it has not been in vain.

"This war has been popular and unlike other wars, in that it seemed sometimes as if the chief strain was behind the lines and not at the lines. It took so many men to conduct the war that the older men and the women at home had to carry the nation. Not only so, but the industries of the nation were almost as much a part of the fighting as the things that took place at the fronts.

"So it is for that reason that I have said to those with whom I am at present associated that this must be a peoples' peace, because this was a peoples' war. The people won this war, not the Governments; and the people must reap the benefits of the war. At every turn we must see to it that it is not an adjustment between Governments merely, but an arrangement for the peace and security of men and women everywhere.

"The little obscure sufferings and the daily unknown privations, the unspoken sufferings of the heart, are the tragical things of this war. They have been borne at home, and the centre of the home is the woman. My heart goes out to you, therefore, ladies, in a very unusual degree, and I welcome this opportunity to bring you this message, not from myself merely but from the great people whom I represent."

WANTS RUSSIA IN LEAGUE.

Isolation is an Impossible Condition, Professor Kallen Declares.

In discussing the League of Nations, Professor Horace Meyer Kallen of Harvard University, at the People's Forum at Cooper Union last night, said that if the league included all the nations, especially Russia, the result would be the extension of the Monroe Doctrine to the world, whereas any attempt to exclude Russia would result in another Holy Alliance.

The conditions which confronted the world today, he said, were exactly the same as those that confronted the world at the time of the American and French revolutions, with the one additional factor, that of the invention of machinery. Machinery had made the nations interdependent, and therefore any one nation was unable to exist without the good-will of the rest of the world, or without recourse to arms. In discussing America's need of nitrates, as an example, Professor Kallen said:

"Before the war we paid $75 a ton for nitrates from Chile, but during the war we were compelled to make them at a cost of $250 a ton. Now that the war is over there are some gentlemen who are opposed to the League of Nations, and ask that a protective tariff be placed upon nitrates so that the difference between $75 and $250 will be added to the cost of bread for you and me. Now under the old imperialist system we would establish our interests in Chile, then later pick a quarrel with her and by force of arms take her over and make her a part of us. Instead, we ought to depend upon the good-will that it is the intention of the league to foster, for good-will is one of the best things in the world to depend upon.

"The Monroe Doctrine protected America from the establishment of colonies of monarchist countries upon the western hemisphere; it preserved to her the right to work out her own salvation, to experiment in her own way without interference. A League of Nations would do this for the whole world. It would do it for Russia, which is making a new experiment in government.

"Whereas 100 years ago Russia could have continued to exist isolated from the rest of the world, the invention of machinery now makes this impossible. The two conditions dovetail so that the league is necessary for Russia and Russia is necessary for the world.

How to avoid family money-disputes

WHEN a well-to-do man dies, you have probably noted the alacrity with which well-intentioned relatives and friends volunteer to instruct the widow how to invest.

From all sides the heirs are tempted to put money into this and that "wonderful opportunity," "great money maker," "sure thing." Family disputes are apt to arise. Troubles follow.

Wise investors are rare.

The sound investment of other peoples' money primarily calls for years of cool-headed investing experience. To this should be added an active knowledge of present-day investment opportunity. Most important of all, absolute safe-guards should be set up against temptations to waste money in any form of speculation.

If you wish your wife and other heirs to enjoy the lasting benefits of your savings and forethought, with no chance for family money-disputes, you will do well to look into—

for safe-guarding the money you leave

A COLUMBIA TRUST FUND is simply money set aside under the protection of the Columbia Trust Company and soundly invested to provide periodical income for definite objects.

The proper investment of the money you leave your wife and other heirs becomes assured.

Income from the Columbia Trust Fund will be paid in installments to whom you wish and when you wish—and in the amount you wish.

We are bound by a written agreement to carry out your wishes definitely.

Life insurance or any other money may be used to form the Trust Fund.

Our fees for this service are very moderate.

While we would prefer to explain all the advantages of a Columbia Trust Fund to you in person, if you wish, we will gladly go into the matter more fully with you by mail.

HOW TO SAVE ON SHOES

"Out of curiosity I tried a pair of Neolin Soles," writes W. P. Macartney of St. Louis, "and today, after five months of hard service I fail to notice any real signs of wear on them."

This statement points the way to real economy in shoes. What your shoes cost, by the year, depends largely on how the soles wear and Neolin Soles do wear a very long time. Moreover, they are exceedingly comfortable and waterproof—scientifically made to be exactly what soles should be and so worn now by millions.

They are available everywhere on new shoes and for re-soling. They are made by The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company, Akron, Ohio, who also make Wingfoot Heels, guaranteed to outwear any other heels.

U-BOAT 53 SANK THE JACOB JONES

BAGLEY WAS RECOGNIZED

German Commander Saw Him Here — Sent Out Wireless Call — How the Ticonderoga Sank.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.—The American destroyer Jacob Jones, sunk off the Irish coast by a German submarine Dec. 6, 1917, was torpedoed by the U-53, the vessel which visited Newport, R. I., in the Summer of 1916, and later harried allied merchant shipping off the New England coast.

This fact was disclosed in the report of Lieutenants F. L. Muller and J. H. Fulcher, U. S. N., who were captured by the submarine U-152, which sank the cargo transport Ticonderega Sept. 30, 1918, and released when the German submarine flotilla was surrendered Nov. 21, after they had spent nearly two months on the submersible in American waters and at the German submarine base at Kiel.

The report, made public tonight by the Navy Department, showed also that the German officer commanding the U-53 when the Jones was destroyed, Captain von Schrader, was aboard the boat when it was at Newport. He there saw Commander David Worth Bagley, a brother of the wife of Secretary Daniels, who commanded the Jacob Jones. Von Schrader told the captured American officers that he recognized Bagley in the dory of the sinking destroyer and sent out a wireless call for aid before leaving the scene. A note appended to the report, presumably by Vice Admiral Sims, said such a call was picked up at Queenstown, but that its origin had been a mystery.

The U-152, which, after sinking the Ticonderoga and taking Muller and Fulcher aboard, continued to American waters to raid shipping, encountered the U-53 on her way back to Kiel after all German submarines had been recalled near the end of the war. Besides telling of the destruction of the Jacob Jones, Captain von Schrader said that, six weeks earlier, in the Bristol Channel, he had sunk an American scort ship, believed to have been the former coast guard cutter Tampa, which went down with all on board, and had fired a torpedo at the American scout cruiser Chester. The Tampa was sunk last Sept. 26, and the Navy Department said there was no evidence that the U-53 was in the vicinity The Chester was not hit.

The two American officers, in their joint report to Admiral Sims, told a detailed story of events during their stay on the U-152 and on the submarine mother ship, Kronprinz Heinrich, in Kiel harbor. They spoke also of their unique experience in being the only passengers, so far as known, to travel from Germany to Harwich, England, with the flotilla of enemy submarines surrendered two weeks after the signing of the armistice.

Sinking of the Ticonderoga.

The Ticonderoga, which was going to France with a cargo of railway cars and 113 army personnel, in addition to her naval crew, had fallen behind her convoy in misty weather, when she was attacked with shrapnel fire by the U-152, which fired forty shots, demolishing the radio house and killing four members of the 6-inch gun crew before the cruiser Galveston hove in sight and drove the enemy off. More than an hour later, the U-152 reappeared and pounded the Ticonderoga with forty more shots, which finally reached the engine and fire rooms. The order to abandon ship was given, but a sheet hoisted in the rigging as a sign of surrender was not heeded by the submarine, and, according to the report, Fulcher "waved a pillow slip from the deck." The Captain of the transport had been wounded, as had Fulcher and Muller, the executive officer, and Fulcher, who was First Assistant Engineer, agreed there was nothing to do but surrender, as many of the men aboard had been killed.

After the Ticonderoga went down the U-152, after fishing out barrels of potatoes and onions from the floating wreckage, picked up Muller, who was taken for the commander of the ship, and later Fulcher. The report said that Captain Franz of the U-boat "was under the impression that the aftergun (of the transport) had continued firing after the sheet had been hoisted."

Many wounded men on rafts or in the water pleaded with the Germans to be taken aboard, as they had no food or water or chance of life if left to their fate, but Franz told them he had "room for no more" and cast them adrift.

Muller and Fulcher made no complaint of their treatment aboard the submarine, which was outward bound from Kiel for the American coast on her second trip, and which continued into the gulf stream on the lookout for allied shipping. First news of the armistice negotiations came by radio, with the message: "Engage men-of-war only. The merchant war is ended." The Americans were told by the German officers that this was "the first act of our new Government."

On Oct. 12, however, the U-152 encountered and sank the Norwegian bark Stifinder off the Newfoundland coast, leaving the crew in their boats 1,000 miles from land. Two days later an unarmed ship was fired at, but a cruiser or destroyer drove the U-boat under and dropped depth bombs. Several duels with armed ships occurred later, the results of which the prisoners did not learn, and on Oct. 20 came a radio order, "All submarines return to Kiel," which was obeyed.

Announced the War Was Over.

It was not until Nov. 11 that the U-152 reached the North Sea mine barrage, through which it passed on the surface. The following day Captain Franz announced that the armistice had been signed and the war was over. "All hands seemed pleased," the report said.

That night in the Skagerrack the U-53 was encountered, and the story of the sinking of the Jacob Jones was heard The last report from the U-53 was that she was headed for Swedish waters to intern rather than return to Germany.

Only ten of the eighty in the crew of the U-152 voted to intern. Captain Franz then set out, saying he did not know where they would arrive, whether in Sweden, Denmark, or Kiel, but adding that the Americans were no longer prisoners and would receive his protection at all hazards.

The U-152 reached Kiel Nov. 15 and tied up with six other submarines beside the mother ship. The Americans were permitted to go ashore and received good treatment at all times. Officers and men both said they would do everything possible to help the Americans reach a neutral country, but finally the German Sailors' Committee, which was in charge of all ships at Kiel, told the Americans that the submarines were going to England with transports," and that they could go aboard the transports if they pleased. The crew of the U-152 protested and agreed by vote to take Muller and Fulcher with them, saying "we wish to insure your safety."

On Nov. 20 the flotilla set out, the U-152 leading one column of submarines and the U-155, formerly the merchant submarine Deutschland, which made two trips to the United States before this country entered the war, leading the other column.

The report said the German sailors and officers were unanimous in believing Germany would have won the war had not the United States intervened, and added that all appeared enthusiastic over the idea of a German republic.

"Take all our submarines and battleships and battle cruisers," the head of the Sailors' Committee on the German mother ship told the Americans. "Sink them in midocean. We don't want them any more. What we do want from now on are plows and picks and shovels, to get back to work again."

SIGNED WITH THIRTY ROADS.

Belated McAdoo Report Shows Status of Government Contracts.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.—A belated section of the annual report of William G. McAdoo, as Director General of Railroads, dealing wholly with the law operations of the Railroad Administration, made public tonight, says that so far the Federal railroad contract has been signed with thirty railroads, all but seven of which are Class 1 roads.

The Class 1 roads with which contracts have been executed are the Pennsylvania, New York Central, New York, Ontario & Western, Norfolk & Western, Northern Pacific, Pittsburgh & Lake Erie, Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac, Atlantic Coast Line, Santa Fé, Buffalo, Rochester & Pittsburgh, Chicago & Northwestern, Burlington, Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis & Omaha, Cincinnati Northern, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis, Colorado & Southern, Fort Worth & Denver City, Great Northern, Lake Erie & Western, Lehigh Valley, Michigan Central, Minnesota & International, and Missouri & North Arkansas.

The other roads with which contracts have been executed are the Augusta Southern, Detroit Terminal, Georgia & Florida, Gulf, Texas & Western, Indiana Harbor Belt, Lake Erie & Eastern, and Galveston Wharf Company.

URGES A PROTEST ON PACIFIST LIST

ASKS FOR PLEAS TO BAKER

The Nation's Managing Editor Explains Holdup of Publication by Postmaster Here.

Paul U. Kellogg, editor of The Survey, made an appeal yesterday to liberals in this country, whose names had not been included in the alleged "Who's Who" in pacifism and radicalism which was submitted to the Senate Investigating Committee, to wire protests to Secretary of War Baker against the procedure of the Military Intelligence Division, which has been making most of the disclosures to the Senate Committee.

"THE TIMES," said Mr. Kellogg, "published my telegram to Secretary Baker protesting against the list of sixty-two Americans charged by the Military Intelligence Division of the War Department with obstructing the prosecution of the war. The inference might be drawn from this that my name was on the list. Such was not the case.

"I don't care about this so far as I am personally concerned. It would be an honor to be classed with some of those men and women. But such an inference strips my telegram of its force as a protest of an outsider against the sheer ignorance and malignity of that military intelligence list. There may be pro-Germans on the list of sixty-two persons. If so, they have no business to be classed with the vast majority.

Some Became Active in War.

"I find Socialists listed of the same point of view as those who have just overthrown the Kaiser. I find Quakers who represent the far extreme from Prussianism, and to confuse the two is like saying the equator runs through the north pole. I find people who, once the Russian revolution and the American war aims made the war a clean-cut struggle between democracy and autocracy, put their backs into the American war service.

"I find people who were actively for the war before we went into it, who have been unreservedly for it since, but in a struggle against Prussianism abroad kept faith with liberty at home and stood out for freedom of the press and speech. To class them as pacifists is like classing the torpedo boat destroyers with a Staten Island ferry.

"As a whole, the list is about as intelligent as it would be to take Brigham Young, Cardinal Gibbons, Robert G. Ingersoll and Billy Sunday and lump them together as advocates of religion. There is only one type of mind that could commit that blunder, and that the mind of the extreme reactionary who denies that this was a war for democracy, and is afraid that democracy will come out of it.

"It is time that some one broke the spell of Tory-minded terrorism that has set out to put liberal Americans under the ban and to seal their lips, when the democratic world policies which President Wilson is pressing to success at Versailles come up for ratification in the United States Senate.

"I urge liberal-minded Americans who were on the list and who have served their country to wire Secretary Baker, calling on him to retrieve the injury done by his subordinates in that misplaced pill-box of Potsdamism, the Military Intelligence Division of the United States War Department."

Dr. Mussey's Denial.

Dr. Henry Raymond Mussey, managing editor of The Nation, telephoned to THE TIMES last night from his home in Croton-on-the-Hudson to deny the statement made yesterday that The Nation "was recently denied the mails for a time by the Postmaster General on the grounds that it had contained seditious matter." Dr. Mussey pointed out that it was the local postal authorities in New York who held up the Sept. 14 issue of The Nation, and that on the matter being referred to Washington the Postmaster General permitted that issue of the paper to be circulated in the mails.

Dr. Mussey also protested against the statement that Oswald Garrison Villard, editor of The Nation, whose name is included in the list of pacifists and radicals submitted to the Senate Committee on Friday and who is now abroad, had not been "permitted, at last accounts" by the British authorities to proceed from England to France. Mr. Villard reached France from England, Dr. Mussey said, about ten days ago, and the last issue of The Nation contained a cable letter from him sent from France. Mr. Villard, in a telegram to Solicitor General Lamar, sent soon after an issue of his paper had been withheld from the mails in New York, asserted that "no seditious or treasonable utterance has ever appeared in The Nation or ever will."

CHEER FOR IRISH REPUBLIC.

Mass Meeting Sends Cable Message Asking Wilson's Aid.

A crowd of 3,000 persons met last night at Corpus Christi Hall, Broadway and 121st Street, under the auspices of the John P. Holland Branch of the Friends of Irish Freedom and cheered every reference to Ireland as a self-governed nation. After speakers had asserted their faith that President Wilson would insist upon a free Ireland, a cable message was sent to the President urging him to act at the Peace Conference.

A letter was read from Jeremiah O'Leary in which the accused lawyer, whose trial begins today, declared his innocence and made many charges. One of them was that he had been mistreated in the hospital "at the instance of United States District Attorney James W. Osborne, Jr." O'Leary also found fault with the jury panel selected to try him, asserting that few names of Irish extraction appeared in the jury lists. A resolution was adopted calling upon Congress to support the Gallagher resolution and acknowledge the independence of the Irish Republic.

Among the speakers were Norman Thomas, Major Thomas McIntyre, U. S. A., retired; Alfred W. McCann, Peter Golden, the Rev. Patrick J. O'Donnell, and the Rev. P. E. Magennis, the latter National President of the Friends of Irish Freedom.

CALLS PARCEL POST MEETING

Exporters Asked to Aid in Extending the Foreign Service.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26—Exporters throughout the country have ben invited by Otto Praeger, Second Assistant Postmaster General, to attend a conference here on Feb. 11 to consider important questions concerning the improvement and expansion of the international parcel post.

There are at this time parcel post conventions in effect with forty-four countries. To all the countries the postage rate is 12 cents a pound, and to all except four the limit of weight for a single package is eleven pounds. To Equador, Mexico, the Republic of Panama, and Salvador the weight limit is twenty pounds.

In calling the conference the Post Office Department announced that as a result of the war, parcel post services to Austria, Belgium, Denmark, Germany, Greece, Hungary, Liberia, the Netherlands, Nerway and Sweden were suspended. With the removal of the war conditions, it was stated, it was probable that there would be an early resumption of services to all of the countries named except Austria, Hungary, and Germany.

"In order to know what inquiries as to parcel post possibilities have arisen with exporters," says the statement, mail order firms, and others, it is suggested that information be collected by those expecting to attend the conference that would tend to show what countries experience had indicated offered the best field for examination with a view to the cultivation of an opinion in these countries favorable to concessions that may be necessary to permit of agreements for a parcel post service."

LISBON CABINET RESIGNS OFFICE

ROYALISTS REPORT LOSING

Political and Military Prisoners Said to Have Offered Their Services to the Government.

LISBON, Jan. 26. (Associated Press.)—The Portuguese Cabinet has resigned. In an official note the Government explains that although the monarchist movement in Braganza, Lisbon, and other places has been overcome, in still other districts the military and civil elements are seeking to revive quarrels among the Republicans. Wherefore the Ministers, not desiring to weaken the Republican forces in the present grave hour, have decided to resign, but will continue their functions until a new Government is formed.

The royalist movement in the north, which was restricted to Oporto and Braga, is now being put down by the concentration of republican troops. The movement has been completely stamped out in Lisbon, where some infantry, cavalry, and artillery occupied the two forts of Monsanto Hill and Duque and hoisted the royalist flag Wednesday. These forces, which included two batteries of artillery, surrendered last night after a prolonged bombardment by Government troops, aided by marines and battalions of civilian volunteers, who enthusiastically offered their services for the defense of the Republic.

This movement has had an excellent effect in uniting all Republicans to the cause of putting aside divergencies. The political prisoners taken in the recent Santarem rising offered unconditionally their services to the Government against the Royalists. These men included Major Castro, who had escaped from prison, but who presented himself to the Government and offered his aid.

Troops from Lisbon are now proceeding to the north.

Yesterday afternoon a Republican airplane flew over the city, dropping leaflets, and the President rode through the streets, being received with enthusiasm. Incendiary fires kindled in the outskirts of Lisbon during the day were quickly extinguished. Wire communication with Braga, Oporto, Vienna, and Vizeu is still interrupted.

All the political prisoners have been released, with the exception of the assassin of Dr. Sidonio Paes, President of the republic.

PARIS, Jan. 26.—A dispatch from Oporto dated Friday, says communication with Lisbon was still cut. The mobilization of the army was continuing and civil battalions were being organized. Oporto was tranquil.

KING REPORTED IN PORTUGAL.

But His Private Secretary Denies Manuel Has Left London.

VIGO, Spain, Jan. 25.—Former King Manuel is reported to have entered Portugal at 6 o'clock this morning, having crossed the Minho River at Caminha.

Persons arriving here from Oporto report that an airplane has dropped leaflets over the city which advise foreigners to depart if they do not wish to be the victims of wholesale slaughter.

LONDON, Jan. 26.—The private secretary of King Manuel of Portugal is authority for the statement that Manuel still is in London, and that he does not intend to go to Portugal.

On the other hand, close friends of the former King, who hitherto had denied rumors that he had left England, refused today to comment on the report that he had entered Portugal.

HOOVER SEES PERIL TO OUR FARMERS

cumulated large stocks of fats as an insurance against the submarine menace. Freed from this menace, and with the shortage of finance experienced by all Governments, together with the loss in the storage of commodities by deterioration, there is a natural desire on their part to reduce their stocks.

"Other factors have entered into the situation. For instance, the inactive armies and munition workers are consuming less fats, and the vegetable is freed for human consumption. This came upon us immediately with the armistice in early November in the midst of our heaviest hog marketing season, which lasts from October until March. When I left home for Europe in November this problem was already facing me as one among many others for which assistance had to be found, in the protection of our American farmer, lest from failure to find a market for his products during the armistice and pending the wider markets of peace his prices might fall below his cost of production, entailing great waste of surplus commodities.

"We have found it possible to protect the American farmer in the two and one-half months since the armistice. This we have done by co-operating with the Allies, in opening wider markets to neutral countries and by relief shipments into the liberated territories. The next and last six weeks of the high fat production season will be still more difficult to manage, as peace cannot be expected in that time, restoring extended markets.

"On the other hand, five-sixths of this problem is already completed, and by next May, if we have peace and freedom, any surplus that accumulates now will be turned into another world shortage of fats. Indeed, if the entire consuming population of the world were able to obtain fats today, there would be a shortage at this moment, even with our great surplus production.

"Numerous solutions have been proposed. It has been considered that the allied Governments should continue to purchase the surplus production of pork products, despite the accumulated stocks and lack of immediate need, and thus protect the American farmer against the surplus provided especially for them. It has been contended that they are under moral obligations to execute the forecasts of their requirements given from time to time through their various agencies.

"The Allies can, however, contend that they also have great problems of excess production in commodities such as munitions, which they have, likewise, produced under war pressure. They can contend that we have jointly fought and won the war; that this is sudden and catches us all with a vast production which must be faced and liquidated by each of us without undue pressure, one against the other; that they, like ourselves, are entering a period of large employment during the readjustment, and that their people, like ours, need lower food prices.

"The real solution lies in the hope of early peace and, in the meantime, the steady demobilization for all restrictions on free marketing of surplus foods, except in enemy territory, thus re-establishing the law of supply and demand.

"Practically all restrictions on American food exports have been removed. Progress has been made in lifting neutral blockade restrictions, and further relaxations of blockade measures are under earnest consideration. The readjustment of consolidated buying agencies is hoped for, in order that merchants may enter upon trade freely on both sides, and thus secure a normal basis of price determining, without any dominating influences.

"It is, however, no more possible to demobilize in a week the whole of these intricate forces set up during the war than it is to demobilize our army by dismissing it on the field; and, pending these solutions, our American farmers, merchants, packers, and banks simply must stand together for two or three months to carry our excess surplus over until the markets of the world have been more extended and finally liberated by peace. The meeting of farmers' and packers' representatives called at Chicago on Tuesday has to consider these problems."

MORRIS PROFITS 7.83 PER CENT.

CHICAGO, Jan. 26.—Morris & Co., packers, in their financial report for the year ended Nov. 12, 1918, made public today, show net earnings of $4,217,858 upon a capital investment of $53,864,934, or 7.83 per cent., less than 1½ cents on each dollar of sales. The volume of sales shows an increase of $100,000,000, and the profit a decrease of more than $1,000,000. Cash in bank shows a gain of over $13,000,000, while total liabilities increased slightly above this amount.

President Edward Morris says in a statement to stockholders:

"This was accomplished by paying only a small portion of the earnings in dividends to the stockholders, allowing the balance to remain in the business, and also by keeping the company's products closely sold. We were therefore able to go through the year without any re-financing."

Thirty per cent. of the firm's products were used in feeding the Army and Navy and the Allies.

In commenting on the net profit for the year, President Morris said:

"This profit is very small, especially considering the fact that we are handling a perishable product, and is considerably less than we have made in previous years. Although we have operated under the Federal Food Administration license, we have not made the profit which was considered fair and allowed under their rulings."

ARGENTINE GRAIN HELD UP.

Shipments Await Arrangement with European Nations.

BUENOS AIRES, Jan. 26.—The cereal market has been paralyzed during the week owing to the uncertainty over the outcome of the proposed cereal convention with Great Britain, France and Italy. Export buyers purchased nothing, enabling home buyers to operate at very low prices. There was a light demand for both maize and wheat, although receipts were heavy.

All efforts to end the strike of port workers have failed. The employers have withdrawn their negotiations because of the hopeless deadlock between them and the strikers, thus leaving the situation the same as it was the first day of the strike three weeks ago.

FARMERS ARE REASSURED,

But Advised to Abandon Emergency Practices in Planting.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.—Farmers of the United States were urged today by the Department of Agriculture to return to sound farm practice in the coming season, abandoning certain emergency measures adopted during the war so as to assure ample supplies of all kinds for this country and Europe.

No cause for alarm as to the ability of American agriculture to maintain its position in world trade during the period of readjustment is foreseen by the department, which declared that a considerable demand from European countries still exist.

Readjustment is foreseen by the department, which declared that a considerable demand from European countries for foodstuffs was almost assured for a year or more.

The signing of the armistice found the United States with fairly large stocks of foods, but with smaller stocks of feed. It was recommended that pasture lands plowed up for growing grains and other food crops should be reseeded to grass and that regular and satisfactory rotation of crops be resumed.

A wise livestock program was said to include maintaining horses and mules without material increase, a normal increase in dairy cows and beef cattle, conservative increase in swine until the relative shortage and high price of feeds are overcome, an increase in sheep consistent with facilities and in poultry if a minimum of purchased feed is required.

The department is certain that farmers will be justified in maintaining their acreages of corn, oats, and barley, large productions of which are necessary to livestock production, but the policy as to wheat, of which Europe will need 728,000,000 bushels, depends upon a complicated set of conditions yet undetermined.

GET CHEAPER EGGS BY POST

Employes in Post Office Here Permitted to Try Co-operative Plan.

Fourth Assistant Postmaster General Blakslee has authorized the employes of the New York Post Office to try an experiment in co-operative buying of fresh eggs at their rural sources, the eggs to be forwarded by parcel post to the local office, the Postmaster at the rural office acting as purchasing agent. In a letter to the Postmaster here, Mr. Blakslee states that a similar plan has been tried out in Philadelphia and Washington for the past eight weeks and that a saving of 15 cents a dozen on eggs has resulted.

From prices gathered in country towns near New York, he estimates that, allowing 3 cents for postage, war tax and return of the container, eggs can be brought here for 73 cents a dozen, a saving of 11 cents over the price fixed as reasonable by the Federal Food Board at the time Mr. Blakslee's letter was written.

FEAR BRITISH CUT IN AMERICAN TRADE

Motor Car Shippers Send Protest on Announcement of Renewed Restrictions.

HOPE OF LIMITED RELIEF

Enthoven Intimates That Action Will Be Taken to Tide Over Period of Change.

By Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Jan. 25.—Assurances given at the Board of Trade today to a deputation, representing the motor trade group of the American Chamber of Commerce, have gone far to remove apprehensions felt by American importers here as to the future of their businesses.

About a week ago Sir Albert Stanley, President of the Board of Trade, received a deputation of British business men, and, according to the only account of the interview published, "pledged himself that the restrictions on importations which had been lifted for three months shall be reimposed at the expiration of that period, and that there shall be no further removal without the manufacturers of the country being consulted. In fact the President of the Board of Trade realized that it might be necessary to impose further restrictions."

This greatly alarmed the members of the American importing community. They had cheerfully borne the restrictions and regulations imposed during the war, recognizing that they were essential to the safety of England, and had hailed the recent lifting for ninety days of the restrictions on forty-nine articles of American importation with satisfaction, as showing that the period of restraint was drawing to an end. The newspaper report, however, seemed to show that the restrictions were to be more severe than ever.

Holds Out Hope of Relief.

The American Chamber of Commerce sent a letter of protest to Sir Albert, and today the motor car men interviewed in his absence Reginald E. Enthoven, head of the Department of Import Restrictions. That official said it was an error to suppose that the British Government contemplated a policy of exclusion, and it was anxious to consider all representations made by the Americans. He suggested that the motor importers should draw up a statement of the amount of goods each firm would need to import to enable it to maintain itself until the general situation cleared up, and promised that the Board of Trade would consider it and would take no steps without full consideration of the American point of view.

Although only the motor importers were represented at today's interview, Enthoven's statement is understood to show the British authorities' attitude to all American importers, and THE NEW YORK TIMES correspondent learns, has been received with a good deal of relief by them.

It is undeniable that since the armistice was declared the American importing community in London has been a good deal worried as to its prospects. For some weeks the Americans have known that there is no reason, so far as shipping is concerned, why the British import restrictions should not be relaxed. But they have been unable to find that there was much prospect of that being done.

THE NEW YORK TIMES correspondent has found in conversation with a number of American importers a full recognition of the difficulties under which England still labors. They have realized that British manufacturers were not yet ready to resume ordinary trade work, and had a right to defend protection from American competition. The Americans recognized, also, that with 30,000 men demobilized daily the stability of society needed provision of employment for them at once but they could not understand why the authorities still refused to permit importation of such articles as typewriters and cheap automobiles, which England has never manufactured in sufficient numbers for herself, and the lack of which is hampering her own work of reconstruction.

Want a Fixed Policy.

Moreover, they have felt that it was hard that American firms which have been established here for years, and have spent very large sums in advertising and establishing their businesses, should be deprived of the facilities to carry them on one moment longer than necessary, and have the ground cut from under their feet on a sort of side issue.

"Make it quite clear," said one prominent American to THE TIMES correspondent, "that we do not question for a moment the right of the British people to adopt any fiscal policy they please. Personally I should be surprised if they are not forced to go in for protection. They may be exclusionist if they want, or high tariff, or low tariff, as they think best.

"We Americans will adapt ourselves to any policy they decide upon, but we do want a decision. We do want to know where we stand."

Asked if he thought the British authorities would listen to the American representations, he replied emphatically:

"Undoubtedly during the war there have been many instances of hardship and cases where through inadvertence the Americans have come off worse than other importers. Whenever we have brought such matters to the Board of Trade they always have been adjusted as well as possible, and I believe we shall get over this difficulty now."

Soldier Drowned in Bronx River.

Private Isidore Bleiweiss, 20 years old, attached to the Army Transportation Corps, was drowned yesterday in the Bronx River, at 182d Street. His friend, Alexander Greenwald, 18 years old, a collector, of 600 East 136th Street, the Bronx, was rescued. Two boys were drowned in the same spot last Sunday. The young men were walking on the ice near the shore when the ice gave way and although several members of the Bronx Boat Club went to their assistance, they could only save Greenwald.

BRITISH RAILWAY MEN THREATEN TO STRIKE

London Shipyard Workers Go Out Today—Industrial Ferment on Clyde Also.

LONDON, Jan. 26.—Industrial ferment continues. Another conference of the Railway Union, representing nearly the whole kingdom, was held in London today, and a strong feeling was expressed regarding the Government's "continued neglect to deal adequately" with the men's grievances, threatening a strike unless matters were settled by Feb. 9. Another meeting of 8,000 persons engaged in shipbuilding and repairing in the Port of London decided to strike tomorrow for increased wages.

In Glasgow today the labor community was absorbed in a number of meetings, and as a consequence there will be a strike on the Clyde tomorrow, although how many will be involved is not known, opinion being sharply divided on the question of demanding a forty-hour week, on the ground that when the army is demobilized there will not be enough work to go round if normal working hours are maintained. In many of the large works, however, the men oppose this extreme demand and refuse to join in the strike, hence the attempt to organize a general stoppage of work in Glasgow has failed. The tram men are among others who have refused to strike.

WASHINGTON PORTRAIT AT 10 DOWNING STREET

After the luncheon at the British Foreign Office, 10 Downing Street, London, on Dec. 27, an episode occurred which was barely mentioned in the exhaustive cable dispatches describing greater events of the same day.

"After lunching with the Prime Minister," says The Times, "President Wilson unveiled in the dining room at 10 Downing Street, a copy of a full length portrait of General George Washington, the first President of the United States. The picture was presented to the Government by Lord and Lady Albemarle to commemorate the entry of the United States into the war.

"The Prime Minister, the President, and all the luncheon guests assembled in the dining room for the ceremony, and were joined by Lord and Lady Albemarle.

"The unveiling was quite an informal affair. The portrait was covered by a length of plain canvas, and the President, taking hold of the two lower corners of this cover, pulled it away and disclosed the picture, representing George Washington in the uniform of Commander in Chief of the American Army.

"There was no speech-making, but Lord Albemarle informed President Wilson in conversation that he considered it most appropriate that the picture should hang on the walls of the historic building where 142 years ago the Treaty of Independence was probably signed. He added that the portrait was a copy of one of three painted in 1779 by Peale of Philadelphia. The original was hung in the Council Chamber of Philadelphia, but was burnt many years ago. Another was hung in the Senate Chamber at Washington, while the third (of which this was a copy) was sent in 1780 by the packet Mercury as a gift to the Stadholder of Holland. It was sent in charge of the Hon. Henry Laurens, ex-President of Congress, but the Mercury was captured at sea by Lord Albemarle's kinsman, Captain George Keppel, R. N., a son of General George, Lord Albemarle, while in command of the Vestal.

Captain Keppel was sent to England to convey Mr. Laurens with his party and belongings to Falmouth. The luggage included the portrait of Washington, and this had been preserved by the Keppel family. Lord Albemarle added that General William, Lord Albemarle, the grandfather of Captain Keppel, while titular Governor of Virginia, in 1753, had association with George Washington, who, as a young man of 21, was sent by him on a journey many hundreds of miles through the backwoods to carry dispatches to Sanpierre, the French Commander, expostulating against the building by the French of forts on British territory.

"Lord Albemarle handed to President Wilson a document containing a brief history of the original of the portrait which he had just unveiled, and the record ended with the following quotation from Kipling:

Also we will make promise, so long as the Blood endures
I shall know that your good is mine, ye shall feel that my strength is yours
In the day of Armageddon, in the last great fight of all.
Our House shall stand together, and its pillars shall not fall.

"The Prime Minister, in thanking Lord and Lady Albemarle for their gift, said it was appropriate that the portrait should hang in the same apartment with that of Burke, (who was entirely opposed to the war,) and that of Fox, two of Washington's great English contemporaries.

"President Wilson, in speaking of the picture, told of another portrait of Washington, which was hung at Mount Vernon. It was reputed to be a very good likeness, but the painter had failed, as he himself admitted, to catch his subject in the mood which he desired. There was a lack of fire and animation, and the painter was quite unable to obtain the exact expression which he required until a chance occurrence gave him what he wanted. A pair of horses was brought to General Washington for inspection, and he was invited to buy them, but when the price was named, it was so astounding that the owner of that which I am expected to kill. My country, Sir, is too little to commit so great an infamy."

STIRRING WORDS BORN OF THE WAR

Famous Phrases, Like "They Shall Not Pass," That Arose from Crises.

"LAFAYETTE, WE ARE HERE"

Said Pershing at Great Frenchman's Tomb—Lost Battalion's Defiance Shouted by Whittlesey.

The war has developed many dramatic phrases. The majority of these grew out of tense crises. Take, for example, the slogan, "They shall not pass." During the tremendous fighting in front of Verdun, when the Germans made their great desperate drive to break through the French battle lines in 1916, this saying passed from lip to lip among the French soldiers. How it originated is not clear. Some have attributed it to Marshal Joffre, others to Marshal Pétain, who was in command of the French fighting forces at Verdun. Others believe the saying originated with the men in the ranks.

To Americans the sententious utterance of General Pershing when he placed a wreath on the tomb of Lafayette in the Picpus Cemetery in Paris conveyed a significance and an inspiration. "Lafayette, we are here," was all he said, but the American, as well as to the Frenchman, it was better than oratory.

Another dramatic phrase which stirred the patriotism of the American people was that attributed to an American commander at Chateau-Thierry when he responded to the advice of French commanders to retreat by declaring: "The American flag has been compelled to retire. This is unendurable. We are going to counter-attack." These statements have been attributed to both Major General Robert L. Bullard and Major General Omar Bundy. Some observers have regarded this incident as the turning point of the war. From that time the Americans advanced. The victory of Chateau-Thierry followed, and thereafter the German Army retreated.

Vice Admiral William S. Sims, commanding the American naval forces in European waters, was asked, when the first Yankee warships arrived in England, early in May, 1917, "When will you be ready for business?" He replied, "We can start at once. We made our preparations on the way over."

There was a dramatic moment, a great crisis in the world's history when General Pershing placed the American Army under the command of the then General Foch, who had just been made commander of all the allied forces, but none of the phrases that General Pershing used were widely quoted as epigrammatic. One which might so have been selected were the words, "Infantry, artillery, aviation, all that we have is yours. Dispose of it as you may desire."

The retort of Major Charles Whittlesey, commander of the "lost battalion" of the American Army in the Argonne Forest, when the Germans surrounded his isolated command and their commander demanded its surrender, was one of the war's historic phrases. "Go to hell," he replied.

The first great battle of the war, the battle that stopped the Germans at the Marne, elicited from the lips of Joffre the historic words: "The hour has come to advance at all costs; to die where you stand rather than to give way."

General, afterward Marshal Pétain, inspired his weary troops at Verdun by an order of the day, concluding with the words: "Courage! We will get them."

General Foch, commanding the French Army in the first battle of the Marne, had been almost overwhelmed by the onward sweep of the German forces. In a memorable message to Joffre he said: "My right is crushed. My left is in retreat. I am attacking with my centre." He did attack and drove a wedge through the German lines that started their retreat to the Aisne.

The people of Paris were stunned by the rapidity with which the Germans advanced in their first rush toward the French capital. The railway stations were besieged, but the great majority of the people knew they must remain. In this tragic moment General Gallieni, military commander of the city, inspired confidence and cheered the faint-hearted with his watchword, "Jusqu' about," or "To the very end." The populace took up the cry, and Gallieni with his army played a signal part in hurling back the legions of von Kluck at the Marne.

No less inspiring but born of less tragic circumstances was the saying of General Gouraud, who upon entering Strasbourg after the liberation of Alsace and Lorraine declared: "The day of glory has come."

Field Marshal Sir Douglas Haig, Commander in Chief of the British armies in France, gave utterance to an appeal in addressing his soldiers which stirred a responsive chord in the hearts of the allied peoples throughout the world. For three weeks the enemy had battered the British lines in a desperate effort to separate them from the French and drive through to the Channel ports. Day after day the British had been driven back. On April 13, 1918, Marshal Haig called upon his men for one last effort.

"Every position must be held to the last man," he ordered. "There must be no retirement. With our backs to the wall and believing in the justice of our cause, every one of us must fight to the end."

When Vice Admiral Sir Rosslyn Wemyss went to tell the German commander of the naval terms of the armistice one of the Teuton Admirals said: "It is inadmissable that our fleet should be given up without having been beaten."

"It had only to come out," was the laconic retort of Admiral Wemyss. Later when the surrendering German warships were escorted by the British fleet into British waters, Vice Admiral Beatty's historic signal, after the enemy fleet had been moored, read: "The German flag is to be hauled down at 3:57 and is not to be hoisted again without permission."

Premier Venizelos, spurning the German Ambassador's invitation to side with the Central Powers, when Monastir and a part of Serbia were offered to Greece as a German bribe, replied: "You ask me to dishonor my signature, to dishonor my country and to violate its obligations toward Serbia and, as remuneration, you offer me part of the corpse of that which I am expected to kill. My country, Sir, is too little to commit so great an infamy."

CHARLES IN SECLUSION.

Ex-Austrian Emperor and Family Receive No Visitors or Letters.

Copyright, 1919, by The New York Times Company.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

VIENNA, (via Geneva,) Jan. 26.—Rumors concerning the Emperor's mind being obscured are exaggerated. The facts are as follows:

Emperor Charles is living in absolute seclusion with the Empress and their children, maintaining no relation whatever with the members of the dynasty or the political world and receiving no visitors aside from business calls. His only pastime is reading newspapers and his family life.

At present the Emperor is in bad health and depressed, while the Empress is quite resigned and holding up her head in adversity. She has no communication with her mother, the Duchess of Parma.

The Emperor's mother, the Archduchess Maria Josepha, whose palace was seized by the Government, is compelled to accept the Emperor's hospitality at Eckartsau Castle, having no other means of support.

N. Y. U. May Insure Professors.

New York University is considering the adoption of the Carnegie Foundation's plan of insurance for college professors, it was announced yesterday by Professor Marshall S. Brown, dean of faculties. The plan is a substitute for the pension system. It provides that the university shall assume a part of the annual payments of the premiums. The system was outlined to the Faculty at a meeting addressed by officials of the foundation. It was said by them that an apportionment of $1,000,000 had been made by the foundation for promulgating the insurance plan.

SEES MAYOR'S HAND IN COPELAND ACTION

FAVORS FEDERAL CONTROL

Dr. Vincent Urges National Department to Carry on Work Achieved in War.

The charge that Mayor Hylan's policy of instituting borough autonomy in the administration of the Health Department was the direct cause of the disruption of the various bureaus of the Health Department was made last night by Dr. Ira Wile, formerly a member of the Board of Education and an expert in public health, in addressing the Free Synagogue Forum, 36 West Sixty-eighth Street.

"Borough autonomy only becomes possible when the bureaus are disrupted," declared Dr. Wile, who explained that by borough autonomy was meant the transfer of functions from the bureau directors to the chief representatives of the Health Department in the various boroughs. These functions, asserted Dr. Wile, are an integral part of the work of the bureau directors and not of the borough heads.

Dr. Wile stated that the public hearing given by Health Commissioner R. S. Copeland last Friday was only an opportunity for the people "to expand their lungs," for the Health Commissioner's mind was made up as to what he wanted to do before the meeting opened. The speaker, in support of this, pointed out that less than twenty-four hours after the meeting Dr. Copeland issued the department order formally placing the Division of Industrial Hygiene under the supervision, in the Commissioner's office, of Dr. S. Dana Hubbard.

Dr. Wile said that while in charge of the preparation of the official bulletins of the Bureau of Public Health Education Dr. Hubbard was incompetent, and said that he wrote to Dr. Copeland complaining that "it was a shame and a crime" that public health bulletins prepared in such inefficient fashion were sent out to the country with the imprint of the New York Board of Health on them.

"If this man was not able to prepare the bulletins efficiently, he will certainly not be able to tell the people of this city how to take care of themselves so far as industrial diseases are concerned," declared Dr. Wile.

The figures for the influenza epidemic, he said, are being published in such a way that only a technically trained statistician is able to tell what the real condition is. The basis of comparison, he said, ought to be the number of cases of pneumonia or deaths of one week compared to those of the same week the year previous, not with the day previous, as is now done. "When the people learn that there were 600 more pneumonia deaths last week than the same week last year they will realize perhaps what the true conditions are," he said.

Urges Federal Control of Health.

Dr. George E. Vincent, President of the Rockefeller Foundation, speaking last night at the forum in the Church of the Messiah, Park Avenue and Thirty-fourth Street, on "Public Health and the War," asserted that the war had clearly shown the need for national control of public health. Dr. Vincent pointed out that England was establishing a Ministry of Public Health to carry on the work that had been accomplished during the war. The great gain in scientific knowledge of public health problems made during the war would be lost, he said, unless centred in a Federal organization for research.

"I hope soon to see the establishment of a Federal Department of Public Health," added Dr. Vincent, "co-operating with all the other agencies working in the interest of the health of the public in the establishment of a program of State and municipal subsidy. Team play among the public health agencies at work in this country should lead to the establishment of the nation-al department of public health, which, without imposing its authority unduly, would through research serve as a guide to the many kinds of public health agencies that have sprung up."

Dr. Vincent said that the French Government was also considering the establishment of a Ministry of Public Health. In three or four years' time, he said, when the country had become settled after the tremendous pressure due to the war, the French public health agencies, which have been aided greatly by the contribution of American effort, would give serious attention to the reduction of the mortality rate, next to that other menace, the birth rate of the country."

MARSHALL SAYS HANG REDS

Vice President Favors Drastic Methods in Checking Bolsheviam.

BALTIMORE, Md., Jan. 26.—Vice President Marshall in an address at the Presbyterian rally here tonight said that Bolshevism and all it represented must be suppressed in this country, and those leaders who were instrumental in trying to precipitate riot should be hanged. The great congregation of Presbyterians vigorously applauded the Vice President's declaration.

Mr. Marshall's address was devoted to the reconstruction problems, and he vigorously assailed those who would overthrow the institutions of the Government. He was introduced by Senator France of Maryland. After referring to the work now being done with the hope of rehabilitating the world, he said that he, like all others, hoped the millenium was near and that never again would men be called upon to offer their lives on the altars of militarism and autocracy. Of an unhesval in this country, he said he had no fear.

"I want to make one political statement," he said. "I have always been opposed to granting special privileges to a class and for that reason I was down on a protective tariff. You must get it out of your head that you are entitled to more than your neighbor has."

PERU TRUSTS PARIS VERDICT

Press Favors Tacna and Arica Decision by Peace Conference.

LIMA, Jan. 26.—The newspapers have favorably commented on the recent statement of Don Ignacio Calderon, Bolivian Minister to the United States, who announced that while Bolivia would have preferred that the dispute over the provinces of Tacna and Arica be adjudicated by the United States, she would be satisfied with a decision by the Peace Conference.

A popular subscription is being solicited to send a 15,000-word cablegram to President Wilson containing a treatise by Enrique Mirigax on the subject.

A business firm has given $1,000 for the relief of refugees from Chile, who are still arriving here.

ODERBERG CAPTURED BY CZECHS FROM POLES

Pope Benedict Seeks to Stop Fighting Between Poles and Ukrainian Troops.

AMSTERDAM, Jan. 26.—Czech troops have captured Oderberg from the Poles after sanguinary fighting, according to a dispatch from the Breslau National Council.

BERLIN, Jan. 26.—The Vorwärts, commenting on the fighting between the Czechs and Poles at Oderberg, says: "We will not again let Germany be made the area of all sorts of adventures and battles. The Government is making all preparations to assure the safety of our peoples against Polish imperialism, as well as against the Czechs."

Oderberg is a town of 1,500 population, situated on the Oder River, on the frontier between Austrian Silesia and Prussia. Czech and Polish forces have been operating in that district for some time. Inhabitants of Austrian Silesia and their German neighbors sent out an appeal to the Peace Congress about two weeks ago, protesting against continued aggression there from the Poles and Czechs.

Allied Troops Going to Poland.

PARIS, Jan. 26.—A detachment of allied troops is entering Poland by water.

Pope Benedict has requested intervention by Monsignor Ratti, Papal Delegate at Warsaw, Archbishop Bilozeski of Posen, and Archbishop Sseppycki of Lemberg, to end the conflict between the Ukrainians and Polish troops, according to a message received in Paris by the Polish National Committee.

It is said that General Petlura, head of the peasant army of the Ukraine, will send a subsidy of 1,000,000 rubles to the Ukrainian troops fighting the Poles in Galicia.

Ignace Jan Paderewski, the Polish Premier, has addressed the following communication to Poland's representatives abroad:

"At the request of the Chief of State, Generalissimo Pilsudski, I have assumed the duties of Premier and Foreign Minister.

"I wish to express to you my thanks for the devotion you have shown in the exercise of your duties and at the same time to ask you to continue them provisionally until further orders.

"In the near future I shall take special measures for the organization of our representation abroad, of which you will receive suitable notice."

WORK DONE BY LEGAL AID.

Society Headed by Charles E. Hughes Helped Many Inducted Men.

The Legal Aid Society of New York, of which Charles Evans Hughes is President, issued a résumé of the work of the organization yesterday in connection with the selective service law. The work of the society was directed toward preventing inducted men from becoming victims of "shyster lawyers," giving advice to dependents of men inducted, and investigating fraudulent claims for allotment allowances.

"The society's endeavors to a greater or less extent," declared Leonard McGee, attorney in chief of the society, "rendered abortive the activities of a class of legal practitioners in the city always on the alert to take advantage of the ignorance or gullibility of the general public. Some draftees reported that from $30 to $40 had been asked of them for the preparation of affidavits in support of claims for exemption."

Especially helpful, said Mr. McGee, in combating this practice was the work of the attorneys who patriotically enlisted in the bureau of free legal advice which the Legal Aid Society maintained. Many efforts, however, he continued, were made by registered men to pervert the bureau's functions in support of attempts to evade army service. The society also waged a war on designing women who tried to trick soldiers and sailors into signing over to them their pay allotments. The report for the last six months of 1918 of the general work of the society showed that a total of 18,367 applicants had asked the aid of the organization, 8,319 of those who sought legal advice being women.

WANTS FEDERAL AID IN FOREIGN TRADE

SEES ABUNDANT MARKETS

Declares Government and Business Men Should Formulate a Definite Shipping Policy.

President George E. Smith of the Manufacturers' Export Association issued a statement yesterday urging that the Government should run its merchant marine at a loss to establish America's export business and look for compensation for the loss at a later day when a flourishing export business would put the merchant marine on a solid footing.

Mr. Smith asserted that this course was taken by the United States when it appropriated millions for the transcontinental railroad lines before there was a community to support them, with the result that the Government was rewarded later in the general increase of the commerce and prosperity of the country.

"The war has placed the United States," Mr. Smith said, "in a position internationally that she never occupied before. The American manufacturer is now awake to the opportunities that lie before him in export trade, provided he can obtain the necessary facilities for carrying on that trade. During the war he has increased his production to the point where it is highly desirable for him to obtain new markets. At the present moment exporting manufacturers are having difficulty in obtaining cargo space in American ships, and where space is available the rates are so high that only abnormal war conditions and abnormal demands from abroad permit payment of these rates.

"If normal conditions were to return tomorrow, and present shipping rates were to continue, our present export trade would shrink to half its size. The only American goods which can stand ocean freights are those which have no real competition in foreign markets. All our staple manufactures would be shut out of export trade automatically by the cost of transportation. Why should a South American firm purchase a ton of staples from the United States with the cost of production the same in Europe and here, if, as is the case at present, it costs him $25 to ship that ton from the United States to Buenos Aires, and only $15 from Liverpool to Buenos Aires?"

"There seems to be substantial agreement among the thinking men of this country that our best interests demand the promotion of America's overseas commerce. This being so, it is high time that our Government and our business men get together to formulate a definite shipping policy which will give the American exporter a chance to survive.

"America's export trade today is in the same formative condition that our West was forty years ago. In the markets of the world there is an abundance of opportunity for the American manufacturer. I believe that the nation should provide transportation facilities for the pioneers of the West.

"If the nation will now establish cheap ocean freight rates in American ships, even at a loss, an export trade will be built up whose volume will in time compel favorable trade routes and cheap freights without Government assistance.

"Our Government has a fleet of new merchant ships at its command. Let it be wise enough and bold enough to offer these ships to America's export trade at rates as low as those available to America's competitors. The American exporter will more than justify this confidence and this assistance by building up a genuine and permanent foreign trade on that foundation."

CITY BREVITIES.

The formal opening of the Knights of Columbus Longacre Hut, at Broadway, Forty-sixth Street, and Seventh Avenue, is to take place next Sunday night with a vaudeville performance and speeches. The hut will be kept open continuously. There will be music afternoons and evenings and other facilities for making the men comfortable and keeping them amused. This will be the tenth hut to be opened by the Knights in this city.

The ex-Soldiers, Sailors, and Marines' Association has called a meeting to be held tonight at the People's House, 7 East Fifteenth Street, to discuss the question of unemployment. Invitations have been sent to representatives of the Federal Government and to a Republican, Democratic, and Socialist member of the Board of Aldermen to address the meeting.

WOMAN'S BODY ON ROCKS.

Richly Clad, with Gold Trinkets—Had Been There a Month.

Two hundred feet east of Sylvan Avenue, a road running between Fort Lee and Tenafly, and half hidden among huge boulders in one of the loneliest spots along the Palisades two hunters yesterday stumbled upon the frozen body of a young woman which apparently had lain there a month or more. Bandages swathed about the mouth and nose and a half-empty bottle of chloroform near by led the authorities of Bergen County to conclude that the woman had taken her own life.

A preliminary examination failed to disclose the slightest clue to her identity. Her features were unrecognizable and the general appearance of the body led to the belief that she was about 21 years old. In a leather bag near by were found $13, a gold powder puff box, a stick of rouge, a gold pencil, and four keys. The woman was five feet three inches tall and weighed about 130 pounds, with blue eyes, auburn hair, and light complexion. She wore a fur coat and hat to match, a dark blue serge suit, with black binding, a white silk waist with a rose pattern, pink silk undershirt with a floral design, a pink chemise, pink bloomers, brown woolen golf stockings with red striped tops and brown oxfords with rubber heels.

Prosecutor Huckin and County Detective Nestle of Bergen County were summoned when Richard Baldwin and George Marshall of Englewood were attracted to the body by the barking of their dogs. It lay in a spot accessible only by a perilous downward climb, and was removed with great difficulty.

The two officials examined the body and the vicinage exhaustively for evidence of violence, but their failure to discover any weapon and the presence of the chloroform led them to believe she had deliberately made the most careful preparations to end her life. There were no marks on the body, thus disposing of the first theory that she might have been murdered elsewhere and then carried to the spot or pitched from the road above to the rocky spot on the cliff side. None of the expensive clothing bore a name or a shopkeeper's or manufacturer's mark of any sort, and the leather bag had been stripped of everything that might aid in immediate identification.

After the body had been removed to an undertaking establishment in Englewood the New York police were asked to ascertain if her description fitted that of any missing person from this city. Detective Edward Wiesner of the Bureau of Missing Persons at Headquarters was unable to find a description that corresponds with that of the dead woman. A further search of the records will be made today, as the New Jersey authorities at first believed it probable that the woman had taken the Fort Lee Ferry from New York and had walked two miles to the spot where she died.

Another theory evolved from the fact that she wore golf stockings is that she may have been one of the golfers who played on the course at Englewood or some nearby place, and an effort will be made today to learn if any of the frequenters of these golf clubs know of a woman who disappeared.

The spot where the body was found is about opposite Riverdale, N. Y., and was some distance from a road that is little traveled. Altogether, if the woman had been familiar with all that part of New Jersey she could not have selected a spot where discovery would have been more difficult.

After the New York police had failed to find any clue to her identity, the New Jersey authorities were somewhat inclined to believe she may have lived in that State.

The quality of the clothing, the gold trinkets, and the well nourished and well groomed state of the body indicated that she had been in good circumstances.

LAUDS MEN OF THE 77TH.

Major Greene Tells of Division's Work at the Front.

Major Frederick S. Greene of the 302d Engineers told the members of the regimental association at their meeting in the Engineering Societies' Building yesterday that he did not believe this city realized yet that its 77th Division was easily the finest of all the National Army divisions sent to France. He said there might be some argument about the relative merits of the National Guard and regular army divisions, but none about the National Army units, because the 77th was far superior to all others.

One of the facts he wished to emphasize, Major Greene said, was that it was the 77th Division that went through the Argonne Forest, and he indicated the division's sector lines on an official map to show that it had carried out the campaign virtually unaided. The division remained on active service almost continuously for 153 days, he said, with only about fifteen days counted out for rest. When the drive upon Sedan began, Major Greene added, the 77th outran all the other divisions and was about four days ahead of all others when, four days before the signing of the armistice, it was ordered to halt a short distance from the stronghold. In courtesy to the French the divisional lines were changed then and French units entered the city, he said.

Although he mentioned several instances of superior bravery of men in the 302d Engineers, Major Greene especially mentioned by name Captain Robert C. O'Donnell of F Company; Captain Madison Lewis, detached; Captain Gilbert H. Crawford of B Company, and Sergeant Gingras Roskowski of F Company. He mentioned also Lieutenant James F. Brown, who received the Distinguished Service Cross for valor and later was killed in action.

CELESTINS VICHY

The Vichy Company

BEGS to extend appreciation to the Medical Profession and the general public of America for their patronage and their patience with the difficulties imposed on Celestins Vichy by war conditions.

As you know, the Celestins Vichy Springs are the property of the French Republic, and the French Government, realizing the high regard of American physicians and the public for Celestins Vichy, has done everything in its power to avoid cutting off shipments to America altogether.

That shipments have been far from adequate during the past four years and the condition and packing of the goods has not always been right—we are unhappily aware.

But we can now announce, and do so gladly, that the packing and shipping of Celestins Vichy are now back to peace time standards.

Cargo space, while still limited, is being found.

Packing supplies, though also limited as yet, are being obtained in sufficient quantities to guarantee perfect delivery.

We can definitely foresee the time when the supply of Celestins Vichy in this country will be adequate for a constantly increasing demand, and each bottle carefully packed the real French way.

SOLDIER RETURNS TO FIND WIFE DEAD

331ST INFANTRY HOME AGAIN

Officers State 27th Division Has Many New Men Now from Outside of New York.

Among the 3,978 troops standing on the deck of the transport Caronia when she was warped into her pier at the foot of West Fourteenth Street yesterday morning was Private Milton K. Dodd of Company E, 331st Infantry, whose home is in Brooklyn. The band played "Home, Sweet Home," and he saw his father and mother waiting on the pier, and he cheered with the hundreds of other soldiers standing by him. Dodd had left his young wife, Rose, with his parents, but he could not see her on the pier. When the gangway was lowered one of the debarkation officers sought out Private Dodd and brought him to his parents. After embracing them both, he inquired for his wife. For a minute there was no reply, and then the father broke the sad news that his wife had died of pneumonia on Nov. 20 and his son nearly collapsed. They had only been married a year. Mr. Dodd, Sr., said, when the war called his son to the army and his wife became very despondent over his going away, and had a presentiment she would never see him again.

While this sad scene was being enacted on the pier, Private Joseph Craig of Alabama, also of the 331st Regiment, who was in good health and was looking over the rail, was stricken by heart disease and died in fifteen minutes.

The Caronia left Liverpool on Jan. 14 with ninety-two civilians and sixty wounded from the base hospitals, and then steamed to Brest, where 3,918 officers and men were embarked, including the entire 331st Infantry of sixty officers and 2,246 enlisted men, chiefly from Ohio and Western Pennsylvania, with replacement men from all parts of the United States. The regiment was in command of Colonel H. A. Hannigan, who formerly had the 344th Regiment. The 331st Regiment as a unit had not been in active service, but many of the officers and men had fought in other regiments.

The troops were taken in ferry boats from Pier 53 to Long Island City, where they were received by a big crowd of people, who cheered them as they entrained for Camp Mills.

Besides the 331st Regiment, there were three casual companies on board, aggregating 421 enlisted men, with six officers in charge, and fifty-two casual officers. There were forty-five enlisted men in the ship's hospital, and the ship also brought back thirty-four women army nurses.

Many Have Mumps and Measles.

The hospital cases were chiefly mumps and measles, which, the surgeons said, were both very prevalent in France, especially in the dugouts in the rear of the lines, as there was not much fresh air inside the dugouts, and that enabled the germs of the diseases to keep active. It might sound funny to people in America, they said, to hear about big, strong soldiers having mumps or measles, but it was no joke "over there."

An officer, who was with the 77th Division, said that the night they landed at Calais the city was bombed by the enemy about 11 o'clock, just as the troops were settling down in their new quarters. When the explosions occurred and shook the building where they were, the officer added, they all looked at each other, and a young British officer, who was with them, lit a cigarette, and puffed out in a most cheerful manner in the moonlight the different spots where men had been killed during the previous week.

Several officers said that the people would be surprised when the 27th Division returned and paraded through the streets of New York, as the regiments had been split up considerably in France, and as there were hundreds in it now who had never walked down Broadway or Fifth Avenue in their lives.

Among the wounded officers on the Caronia was Lieutenant Clayton Knight of the 206th Flying Corps, whose home is at 261 Fifth Avenue, and who was shot down over the German lines near Courtrai and severely injured on Oct. 5. He said that the Germans moved him from hospital to hospital, until he had been in ten and could not remember their outlandish names, but said that he was fairly well treated by the surgeons. The last hospital was near the allied lines, and for ten days and nights they bombarded a bridge not far from the building he was in, but it was not hit. The lieutenant and the other American and British patients expected to see the big shells come down through the roof above their heads, but nothing happened. When the armistice was signed they were taken by the British in ambulances to a hospital in Brussels.

Another officer, Lieutenant Thomas R. Durlin, formerly a Washington, D. C., newspaper man, was gassed twice and perforated with shrapnel. He was a commander of a tank detail of the 301st Battalion, American Tank Corps, which fought all through Picardy with the British and French, and were cited for bravery by both of their military commanders. Durden has the Belgian medal, the French War Cross, and the Hindenburg medal struck by the British to commemorate the smash through the enemy lines. He was wounded by a high explosive shell in September, and gassed in October, just after leaving the hospital.

Lieutenant Henry Clay Kinsey, great grandnephew of the famous statesman of Petersburg, Va., was attached to the 301st Tank Battalion. At Paschendaele he was "grafted" with shrapnel just as he stepped out of the door of his tank. This cut his left hand out of business for a while, and he went to an English hospital. Later he resumed duties at St. Mihiel, where he got a dose of shrapnel which paralyzed his right leg. Since that time he has been in eight different hospitals.

27th Division Men Return.

A number of the wounded soldiers on the Caronia belonged to the 27th Division and have their homes around New York.

Corporal Charles S. Wingert of 19 West Forty-fifth Street, Bayonne, N. J., limped onto the pier with what he believes is too expensive a cane for a corporal. Wingert was with Company D of the 106th, the old 23d National Guard, and was wounded in the Argonne sector. After coming out of the hospital he knew he needed a cane and sought one in the shop of the nearest French village.

"I picked out one worth perhaps a dollar on Broadway," said Wingert, and asked the French proprietor how much he wanted for it. He answered 'Fifty francs.' I asked him twice, because I could not believe that I had heard him rightly. Again he said 'Fifty francs.' Well, it was the only shop, and I had to have it, so I paid about $10 for a dollar cane."

Another passenger on the Caronia was Colonel Hugh H. Young, head of the James Buchanan-Brady Urological Clinic in Johns Hopkins Hospital, Baltimore, who went over on the Baltic in April, 1917, with General Pershing to inspect the arrangements made by the British and French Governments for protecting the health of the men. He established Urological infirmaries at all the base hospitals for the American troops in France, and spent his time in visiting them to see that the work was being properly carried out. Colonel Young said yesterday that the health of the American soldiers was very good indeed, considering the amount of disease there was abroad at the present time through the massing of millions of men in the war.

Max Borland of the 109th Field Artillery, whose home is in Philadelphia, was shot in the leg on July 15 at the battle on the Marna River and taken prisoner. The wound did not heal for four months, he said, and when the armistice was signed Borland was with twenty-one other American prisoners in Mercerburg, Germany, and started to walk back to the allied lines with a German soldier, who spoke English, for a guide. When they got to Berlin on Dec. 15 he managed to get a small American flag, and tied it to his cane and carried it over his shoulder as he marched along the streets from one railroad station to another. The Germans looked very hard at him, Borland said, but did not attempt to interfere with him.

Among the civilian passengers on board were Mr. and Mrs. Charles A. Sylvester of Rio Janeiro, who had to travel via Southampton, England, to get to New York, because there were no direct steamships between the two ports; David Crompton, President of the Booth Steamship Line, and Walter J. Otis and his daughter, Marguerita Otis, who were in Austria visiting another daughter married to an Austrian officer, when the war broke out with the United States, and they could not get away. Miss Otis said that a valuable pony belonging to her sister broke its leg and had to be shot, and that the money the butcher paid for the carcase was more than the animal was worth alive. They were allowed to go about freely in Austria, she added, and were well treated by the people.

FRIENDS VISIT RETURNED MEN.

Special to The New York Times.

CAMP UPTON, N. Y., Jan. 26.—The first big reunion of returned overseas men and their relatives at this camp took place today between the members of the 59th Coast Artillery, which arrived here Friday night, and nearly 1,200 persons, who came here by automobile and on the morning train. The majority of the visitors were from Brooklyn. There were a few reunions at the depot, but the real get-together was at the barracks.

This camp has never seen anything like today's reunion. Everybody cried and laughed by turns, and then settled down to listen to the wonderful stories the boys had to tell. The Catholic Visitors' House, already filled to overflowing with women relatives and friends of the returned men, provided a record number of luncheons. The regiment will be mustered out on Thursday, and no officer or man will be permitted to leave camp in the meantime. All routine was suspended today so that they would be free.

SAYS WAR BROADENED ARMY

Lieut. Col. Whittlesey Warns Against Revenge on Germans.

A large crowd last night attended the usual Sunday night open forum at the Church of the Ascension, Tenth Street and Fifth Avenue, and listened to an address by Lieut. Col. Charles W. Whittlesey, commander of the "Lost Battalion." Colonel Whittlesey said millions of young men who had gone over seas had returned with a new view of life. He pointed out that after eighteen months at the front, however radical a man might have been when he first went over, his experience in the war had given him a broader outlook.

He said in all the time these returned men were over there they knew nothing of the questions that were disturbing the people at home. When they returned they heard much of reparation and revenge, especially against Germany. Colonel Whittlesey predicted that anything said or done in malice against the German people would surely react on American civilization. He declared that if the German people were destroyed the world's morale would suffer.

POLES HERE DEMAND COMPLETE FREEDOM

8,000 at Meeting Ask for Recognition of Paderewski's Government.

GET MARSHALL'S SUPPORT

Express Confidence in President Wilson, and Request That Loan Be Negotiated.

As part of the Polish Day celebration which was held throughout the United States yesterday, 8,000 Poles crowded the Seventy-first Regiment Armory yesterday afternoon and called for the immediate recognition of the present Paderewski Government, said to be a coalition government formed after agreement with General Pilsudski, the former head of the provisional Government. The principal speaker was Medill McCormick, Senator-elect from Illinois. Addresses were also made by Clifford N. Wilson, Lieutenant Governor of Connecticut; Col. James Martin, French High Commissioner; Howard J. Rogers, Red Cross Director of Military Relief; Major Fiorella La Guardia, member of Congress; John C. Kleczka, Congressman-elect from Wisconsin, and John F. Smulski, President of the National Polish Department, who presided. Dr. B. L. Smykowski, Vice President of the National Polish Department, opened the meeting; Monsignor E. F. Strenski pronounced the invocation, and Eva Didur sang "The Star-Spangled Banner."

Vice President Thomas R. Marshall, who found it impossible to be present, sent the following letter to the committee in charge:

I am a son of an American commonwealth which has been a strong sympathizer with the aspirations of the Polish people for freedom. They marked, in so far as they could, this whole-hearted desire by naming one of the counties Kosciusko, and its principal city Warsaw. The Legislature of that State memorialized its representatives in Congress to recognize the independence of Poland in those seemingly far-off nineteenth-century days. Through the whole history of the State there has run a golden cord of sympathy for the hopes and heroic endeavors of the Polish people for the right of self-determination. I am glad, therefore, to be a son of such a State and to have whole heartedly entertained this common sentiment of her citizens. May nothing prevent the ripening this year into full fruition of the age-old longings of a heroic and liberty-loving people.

Want Provinces Returned.

The purpose of the meeting was to voice the demands of the Poles in America as to the just deserts of Poland. After reciting the sufferings of their people and expressing their trust in the motives of President Wilson, the resolutions, which were passed by acclaim, and will be sent to the President and the other peace delegates, make the following specific demands:

We ask for the union of Galicia, the union of Posnania, the ancient cradle of our race, the union of the Silesias, to the Congress Kingdom of Poland in which the present Polish Government is holding forth for the return of the ancient Polish seaport of Gdansk, upon the Vistula, the Polish River, and the constitution of these several partitioned portions in a sovereign and independent Polish State.

We do not seek lands for political or territorial aggrandisement, but that the Polish people may work out their destiny and bear their part of their own improvement and to the improvement of the nation which will be comprehended within a great league of nations.

We also ask for the immediate recognition of the Government of Poland as constituted by Mr. Paderewski, (a coalition Government formed by him after an agreement with General Pilsudski.)

We ask that the new Government be granted a loan, negotiated with strict observance of financial as well as national responsibilities, for Poland does not seek charity. For the Polish soldiers in the field, who are seeking to restore order and to protect the population from lawless bands of returning German and Russian prisoners of war and the terror of the Reds, we ask for aid in clothing, in munitions, and materials of war.

We are in harmony with the vision of Mr. Paderewski. He speaks our thoughts. We express our admiration for the patriotic efforts of the Polish National Committee of Paris, and we send to the delegates who are to represent the Polish nation at the Peace Conference our sincere support and confidence.

After assuring the audience that there was kinship between the Americans and the Poles, that they could well sympathize with each other, Mr. McCormick said: "My friends, it is because we know, we believe that that same spirit of democracy lives in Poland that we send them a message of encouragement across the seas. We know that the same old spirit of democracy has arisen again, and that the people will take up their lives anew. We hope for great things from Poland, and rightly so. We dare to ask that she resume all her greatness of the past. You cannot think of Paderewski today without thinking of Sobieski long ago. Poland that guarded the frontiers of civilization in the past is to resume her watch again. As she keeps watch upon the borders she will keep faith with herself. The Poles at home will bend and forbear, guarding the rights of one another, that no alien enemies will deprive them of what is their own. We dare to hope that not only will Poland be free, but that she will become one of the great powers of Europe. The resources are hers in coal, iron, and waterways, and in the true genius of civilization—the genius which can give to humanity not only soldiers, but contribute to industry and to the arts and to the literature of the world.

In explaining the purpose of the meeting, Mr. Smulski told of some of the conditions prevailing in Poland. "Today," he said, "we have gathered not only to celebrate the resurrection of a nation, but to record our admiration for those who during centuries of oppression have kept alight the sacred flame of nationality. We have met not only to rejoice over what has already taken place in Poland, but to strengthen the hands of those who seek an even greater development in the immediate future. We have met to rejoice not only for the Poles, but for the free peoples throughout the world.

It was announced yesterday that the first relief ship carrying food directly to Poland left in the morning. The "Westward Ho," carrying a $2,000,000 cargo, left for Danzig under the auspices of the Joint Distribution Committee of the American Funds for Jewish War Suffers and the Polish National Committee of America.

Strike Ties Up Belfast.

BELFAST, Jan. 26.—Owing to a strike of the dockyard and municipal workers, the entire city of Belfast was without gas or electricity today. There was no street car service and tonight the people had to do without electric lights. Church services were abandoned.

RED CROSS TO SEND RELIEF TO POLAND

JEWISH COMMITTEE TO AID

Special Care Will Be Given to Children, the Sick, and Those Actually Starving.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.—Announcement was made at the national headquarters of the American Red Cross tonight that the American Red Cross War Council, of which Henry P. Davison, now in Paris, is Chairman, has decided to send a relief commission into Poland. The commission will leave Paris as soon as possible and will proceed to Poland by way of Copenhagen and Danzig, or the most available route.

Upon the authorization of Mr. Davison, this statement was issued by the Red Cross tonight:

"Urgent action has been found to be absolutely necessary in the light of authentic and most appalling information, now for the first time available, concerning conditions of distress in Poland. The opportunity for service also comes at a particularly happy moment, when Paderewski, whom the American people know so well, is arranging, with apparent success, to establish an orderly Government in his country.

"The American Red Cross Commission will be headed by Dr. Walter C. Bailey of Boston and Major Francziczek E. Fronczak, Health Commissioner of Buffalo, N. Y., and representative in Paris of all Poles in America through the Polish National Committee in Europe. Major Fronczak will be detailed by the United States Army to the Red Cross especially for this mission.

"Boris Bogen and Mortimer Schiff representing the Joint Distribution Committee for Relief of Jewish Sufferers, have been in conference with the American Red Cross in Paris, and Mr. Bogen has volunteered to accompany the commission to Poland with a view to consolidating the special work of the Jewish committee with that of the American Red Cross.

"All relief work of the American Red Cross will be on behalf of the entire population of Poland without discrimination.

Doctors and Nurses Going.

"In addition to those already mentioned, the commission's personnel will include at least twelve Polish-American nurses, three American nurses, one or two general medical doctors, one or two dentists, and business transportation, and hospital administration managers.

"The American Red Cross Commission to Poland will operate there in general on the following principles:

"First—Owing to the magnitude of the task, the American Red Cross cannot undertake to feed Poland. The general problem of revictualment is being worked out by the allied Governments.

"Second—The American Red Cross can occupy an exceedingly important field of general relief lying outside the proposed Government activities. The American Red Cross will attempt to supply supplementary diet for children, for the sick, and for the relief of cases of actual starvation. Canned milk will constitute the largest item on this program.

"The opportunity for medical service, nursing, &c., is practically unlimited. The American Red Cross Commission will carry drugs and medical supplies at once, as well as such clothing, blankets, and shoes as can be obtained and transported immediately.

"Among other things available to the Polish commission and of which most valuable use can be made will be the part of the surplus stock of surgical dressings made by American Red Cross women for use of the American Army in France. The American Red Cross chapters at home will be asked to undertake immediately a collection of used clothing, shoes, blankets, &c., for the liberated peoples of Poland and other areas until recently occupied by enemy invaders. Assistance of this character is absolutely vital to the life and health of all liberated populations. The United States Government, through Herbert Hoover, will supply transport for clothing to European ports, concentrating the supplies in a manner similar to the administration of Belgian relief.

"Through Waclaw Janasz, representing the Polish National Relief Committee, who has just arrived in Paris, the American Red Cross has received the first report on the disposition of $200,000 contributed by the American Red Cross in 1917 for condensed milk and food for children, showing that through that appropriation most important relief was given to about 10,000 Polish children under ten years of age.

HELP STARTS FOR POLAND.

Shipload of Food Sails from Hoboken, Bound for Danzig.

The American steamship Westward Ho sailed from Hoboken yesterday for Danzig via Falmouth with $2,000,000 worth of food and clothing for the suffering people of Poland, under the auspices of the Joint Distribution Committee of the American Fund for Jewish War Sufferers and the Polish National Committee for America.

Two representatives of the committee will join the ship at Falmouth and assist in the distribution in Poland. The food includes 3,500 tons of flour, 1,500 tons of condensed milk, and 1,000 tons of meats, butter, &c.

Impressive ceremonies at the pier marked the departure. John F. Smulski, President of the Polish National Committee, came from Chicago to witness the vessel's departure and brought with him a check for $1,000,000 to cover his organization's share of expenses. Albert Lucas, Secretary of the Joint Distribution Committee, delivered a check for a like amount to the representative of the Food Administration Grain Corporation, through whom the supplies were purchased. A Rabbi and a Polish priest blessed the vessel before its departure.

Let Us Have the Truth!

Here Is the One Reason That Some of the Dress and Waist Workers Are Now Striking

The leaders of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union, in conference with the Dress and Waist Manufacturers' Association, absolutely refused to consider any working agreement until the Association would agree to assure every worker employment for life after she had been in any manufacturer's employ for two weeks.

We submit that such an agreement is, on its face, totally impracticable and impossible; and, indeed, it would work an injustice on the workers themselves

Insistence on this one point being an ultimatum, there was no course for the manufacturers to take but continue without a specific agreement.

The Union Leaders Try to Befog the Issue

Compare the statement of the Union to the Mayor with the actual report of the Joint Board of Sanitary Control, dated Jan. 22d, 1919

The JOINT BOARD OF SANITARY CONTROL has operated for the past six years at the joint expense of the Association and the Union for the purpose of maintaining standard sanitary conditions in the industry.

Dr. George M. Price is its director, Dr. William J. Schieffelin, Miss Lillian D. Wald and Dr. Henry Moskowitz represent the public on this board.

The Statement to the Mayor by the Union Leaders

In a letter dated January 15, 1919, written by Benjamin Schlesinger, Pres. of the Union, to Mayor Hylan, he says in part as follows:

"The director of that Board (the Joint Board of Sanitary Control), Dr. George M. Price, in his report of Dec. 5, 1918, states that out of the 825 shops in the Dress and Waist Industry only 18% are without defects. The rest of them either have serious fire dangers or have dirty walls, dirty ceilings, dirty water-closets, etc., etc."

The Actual Report of the Board

On January 21, 1919, upon the request of Governor Smith of this State and Chief Inspector Gernon of the Industrial Committee, made through Miss Frances Perkins, Dr George M. Price, director of the Joint Board of Sanitary Control, made a report of conditions in the Dress and Waist Industry, in part as follows:

"The sanitary conditions of these shops (Dress and Waist Industry) are certainly MUCH SUPERIOR to the shops in any other industry in Manhattan.

"As a rule shops belonging to members of the Dress and Waist Manufacturers' Association are in BETTER CONDITION than the shops belonging to independent manufacturers.

"The reason for this is as follows:

(1)—The shops of the Association are more often inspected;

(2)—They receive an additional inspection monthly by the visiting nurse, for which the Dress and Waist Manufacturers' Association pays, and also by the Fire Drill Squad, which is contracted for through the Association for all the members of the Association;

(3)—Because the shops of the Association members are the oldest shops in the trade and have been inspected and re-inspected a number of times during the last six years;

(4)—Because the Dress and Waist Manufacturers' Association does not accept any new members into the Association without the previous thorough inspection of the shop and they do not admit any firm to membership until the defects found by the Board have been removed; and

(5)—Because the Association, through its manager, has always co-operated with the Joint Board of Sanitary Control in compelling its members to do what is necessary and what has been required by the inspectors and the office of the Board."

Copies of a full report can be had upon application at the Office of the Association.

Importance of Acceptance Business

In The Annalist today, the leading article calls attention to the growing appreciation in the United States of the business of trade and bank acceptances, which is nearing the million mark. The importance of these media for financing commercial enterprises is approved by bankers and mercantile interests. The article describes the organization and work of the Acceptance Council.

Mark Eisner, Collector of Internal Revenue, in another article, advocates the continuance of high taxation as a means of promoting contentment and so destroying Bolshevism.

PENROSE IS ASKED TO EFFACE HIMSELF

Gifford Pinchot Calls Upon Senator to Quit Race for Finance Chairmanship.

"WORST TYPE OF POLITICS"

Paints Pennsylvania Leader as Reactionary and Says He is a Liability to Republicans.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.—Gifford Pinchot, a former leader in the Progressive party, in an open letter tonight to Senator Penrose of Pennsylvania, urges the Senator to withdraw as an aspirant for the Chairmanship of the Senate Finance Committee, to which place the Pennsylvanian, by virtue of seniority as the ranking minority member, contends he will be entitled when the Republicans organize the next Congress.

Mr. Pinchot, who has been a bitter opponent of Mr. Penrose in Pennsylvania politics, tells the Senator that it would be a serious misfortune to the Republican Party in the 1920 election if he should be made Chairman of that important committee. The letter follows:

"An open letter from Gifford Pinchot to Senator Penrose:

"There is a matter of great importance to the Republican Party to which I would like to direct your attention. Before doing so, I want to recall that I ran against you for the United States Senate in 1914, and was beaten. I had no complaint to make at the time, and I have none now. I mention it merely because there will be a tendency on the part of certain persons to attribute this letter to disappointment or spite. I can assure you honestly that it has nothing to do with either.

"Some one, however, ought to take the burden of writing you this letter. In the absence of any sign that some one else is going to do it, I have decided to assume the duty and write it myself.

"Like millions of other Republicans, I am anxious to see the Democrats beaten in 1920. Like them, I see in the possibility of your election to the Chairmanship of the Senate Committee on Finance one of the principal obstacles in the way of such a victory.

"It is well known that the Middle West will cast the deciding vote in the next Presidential election. The Middle West knows you mainly as the most perfect living representative of the worst type of politics in America. Indeed, I am inclined to think it is fair to say that no other man in our history has ever represented to so many Americans all that is worst in American public life. If this is true, it is a record, and you are entitled to whatever credit goes with it.

Cites the Standard Oil Check.

"The people of the United States know that the great monopolies are your friends and that you accepted a check for $25,000 from the Standard Oil Company and thanked them for it.

"They know that you have always been the champion of the liquor interests.

"The women know that you have steadily worked and voted against equal suffrage and child labor legislation.

"The farmers know that in 1911 you voted for the Canadian Reciprocity bill, which left farm products unprotected and put a high tariff on trust products.

"The railroad men know that you voted against a bill providing for block signal systems on all railroads, which would make travel much safer for employes and public alike.

"The wage earners know that the American Federation of Labor has officially declared you to have been 'uniformly hostile or negligent to labor interests in the United States Senate.'

"The Progressives know that you opposed Roosevelt in the Republican National Convention of 1912, when the people of Pennsylvania had declared overwhelmingly for him. They know that you were largely responsible for the split in the Republican Party in 1912 and the election of a Democratic President.

"The Progressive Republican Senators are fully aware of the danger to party harmony and success in 1920 through your candidacy, and they have been fighting it hard.

"The name of the Chairman of the Committee on Finance will be inseparably attached to the coming Republican Tariff bill, which will probably be more widely known and discussed by our people than any other bill before the next Congress. It will be argued by the Democrats that you could not be Chairman of so important a committee and in charge of so crucial a bill unless the Old Guard were in control of the Republican Party. This argument is likely to be effective with great numbers of Progressive Republicans, as well as with Democrats disgusted with Wilson and anxious to vote against him if they can.

Special Privilege and Monopoly.

"If you write the next tariff bill, the people will believe, and they are likely to be right, that it is unduly favorable to special privilege and monopoly. The Payne-Aldrich Tariff bill was fatal to the Republican Party in 1912. What would a Penrose Tariff bill do to it in 1920?

"You are a liability. The undivided support of all the forces you represent would fall far short of carrying the Republican Party to victory in 1920, even if the liquor interests had not lost their stranglehold on American politics.

"On the other hand, the Republican Party cannot win against the Democrats unless the farmers, the women, the Progressives, and some of the organized workers vote with us. Your name as Chairman of the Committee on Finance would go far to insure their hostility to the Republican Party.

"The obvious fact is that you ought not to be Chairman of the Committee on Finance. The mere possibility is a Republican misfortune. You know better than any other man what a burden you have been to the Republican Party. You cannot fail to know how much the success of the Republican Party in 1920 means for the welfare of the nation, and how you are standing in the way.

"If you are not a good enough Republican, are you a good enough American to withdraw your name?

"Yours truly,

"GIFFORD PINCHOT."

It is not assumed that Mr. Pinchot's letter will have any effect toward inducing Mr. Penrose to withdraw his claim to the chairmanship. The Pennsylvanian has insisted that, despite opposition of Progressives in the Senate, he would stay in the race.

FIND HIDDEN MUNITIONS.

Americans Turn Up 35,000,000 Cartridges in Coblenz Region.

COBLENZ, Jan. 26. (Associated Press.)—Thirty-five million rounds of small arms ammunition were among the material abandoned by the Germans in the region of Coblenz. These supplies were recently discovered by the Americans during an exploration of the underground storehouses and tunnels where the German munitions were kept.

Five million rounds of this ammunition had been captured from the French. The other thirty million rounds were manufactured by the Germans, who took captured British shells and loaded them with German powder and bullets taken from the French. Most of these cartridges were boxed and addressed, in readiness for shipment to Turkey.

Thirty-six thousand rifles captured from the British and found stored in Coblenz have been turned over to their original owners, while 10,000 French rifles have been returned to the French.

CITY WOMEN EARN MORE.

Their Factory Wages Higher Than Up State, Report Shows.

ALBANY, N. Y., Jan. 26.—Wages in excess of $20 a week are earned by approximately 8 per cent. of the women employed in four factory industries and the mercantile establishments in New York State. Thirty-two per cent. are paid $14 or over, 53 per cent. earn less than $12, 35 per cent. average less than $10, 20 per cent. make less than $8, and the earnings of 10 per cent. fall below $6 a week.

These figures were made public today by the Bureau of Statistics of the State Industrial Commission. The investigation on which they were based was made in 600 establishments, with more than 60,000 women employes, in paper box, shirt and collar, confectionery, and cigar and tobacco factories, and in mercantile houses.

The earnings of women in New York City are considerably higher than those up-State, the report shows. Thus, for all women tabulated, the medium wage for 16,215 women in 237 factories in the greater city is between $12 and $12.50, while that for 10,666 women in 150 up-State manufacturing plants is between $10.50 and $11. Similarly, for 20,736 women in 88 mercantile establishments in New York City the median is from $12 to $12.50, while that for 7,543 women in 118 shops up-State ranges from $9 to $9.50.

LANE FOR TRADE SCHOOLS.

Secretary Lauds Gen. Armstrong's Theory in Hampton Address.

Special to The New York Times.

HAMPTON, Va., Jan. 26.—Franklin K. Lane, Secretary of the Interior, delivered the Founders' Day address at Hampton Institute today. He described the services of General Samuel Chapman Armstrong to the colored people and to American education.

"General Armstrong," said the Secretary, "needs no monument other than Hampton Institute, born out of the spirit of helpfulness, charity, tolerance, faith, a spirit that represents the new day and not the day that is past. I doubt if there is a single man who has lived in this country who has more certainly seen the way to the character of education that will obtain in the United States in the future than General Armstrong. He foresaw the thing that was needed for the making of a democracy, and he put into this institution a theory of education, a philosophy reaching far further than the colored man, and which will be a standard for us throughout the United States.

"I am here not merely to express appreciation of the method that has been adopted in this institution and which I expect to see adopted throughout the United States, for the time ought not to wait. We ought to see immediately that every boy and every girl who comes out of a public school in the United States has some particular trade."

Secretary Lane described in some detail the record made abroad by the colored troops.

SHOT AS SONS LOOKED ON.

Police Arrest Street Cleaner After Longshoreman Is Killed.

John Studuto, 38 years old, a longshoreman, of 19 Mangin Street, was shot and killed in front of 4 Broome Street last night as his two young sons looked on. According to the story of the boys, four men approached their father and one, drawing a revolver, fired three shots at Studuto's head. The shots and the cries of the boys attracted the police. They later arrested a man who said he was Vito Vaccaro, a street cleaner employed by the city, at his home, 33 Broome Street, charging him with homicide.

Studuto's sons say they saw the man who fired the shots run into the house at 33 Broome Street, and the investigation of the police led to Vaccaro's arrest.

MANN'S CANDIDACY FOR SPEAKER WANES

SENIORITY PROBABLY DEAD

Senate Leaders Demand Party Progress—Reorganization of Democratic Party Also Imminent.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.—Representative James R. Mann, the Republican floor leader, has failed to gain commanding strength as a candidate for Speaker, in the opinion of some of his advisers, and it is reported that his withdrawal from the race may be expected long in advance of the assembling of the next Congress.

Defeat of Mr. Mann's hopes has come chiefly through the attitude of such conservative Senate leaders as Penrose, Lodge, and Smoot, who expressed the opinion that their judgment was against the elevation of Mr. Mann at this time. This opposition has existed from the first, but has exerted itself strongly in the last few weeks, following the publicity given to the gift of beefsteaks and a horse to Mr. Mann by packing interests.

These disclosures of themselves did not make Mr. Mann unavailable, for nobody charged that the gifts affected Mr. Mann's official judgment or integrity. The situation simply provided an excuse to many Republicans who had voted for Mr. Mann when the Democrats were in control to oppose him now that there was a chance of his election as Speaker.

These Senate leaders have said to their friends in the House that the country looked to the House to set the pace for the Republican Party and that the House with a majority of forty-five, must initiate legislation and pave the way for the enactment of Republican principles. They are looking ahead to the Presidential contest, and for that reason they are eager to see the next Congress thoroughly responsive to the wishes of the people.

It is this thought that has induced Senators who have a political dominance in their States to oppose Mr. Mann. While the Speaker, under the revised House rules, has no power in formulating legislation, he stands forth as a concrete example of the thought of the public, and the influence which selected him would be powerful enough to control the Committee on Committees, which nominates the House standing committees. Republican leaders say that the election of Mr. Mann would give the country the impression that Cannonism had been restored, and would carry with it the supremacy of the seniority rule and the elevation to Chairmanships of men of long service but no unusual ability.

Opinion expressed tonight by Republican leaders was that Mr. Mann and the observance of seniority would go down to defeat together. The election to the Speakership of any such candidate as F. H. Gillett of Massachusetts, S. D. Fess of Ohio or Nicholas Longworth of Ohio would carry with it a revision of the rules.

Under the proposed reform the seniority succession would be followed only in case the inheritor of a Chairmanship represented ability and advanced Republican principles. Where length of service was the only thing recommending a man to a Chairmanship, he would be passed over. Some Republicans expect to see not only Mr. Mann defeated for Speaker, but Representative Joseph Fordney passed over as Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee.

Reorganization of the Democratic Party will also come to some degree with the next Congress. Champ Clark, who steps from the rostrum to the floor, will inherit the minority floor leadership under traditional practice. A few days after the late election Representative Claude Kitchin of North Carolina, the present Democratic leader, announced that he would accept the tradition and gladly give way to Mr. Clark, who for years was a picturesque minority floor manager.

It is expected that President Wilson will go a great way toward eliminating Southern dominance in the appointments to be made by him. There are five places of importance to be filled in the next few months. The first of these is in the Department of Justice, where a vacancy will exist on March 4 by the resignation on that date of Thomas W. Gregory as Attorney General. There will be three vacancies in diplomatic posts—Ambassadors to France, Italy, and Russia. The fifth place, it is said, will be the office of Governor General of the Philippines.

$100,000 GIFT TO HOSPITAL.

Anonymous Donor Insists $200,000 More Must Be Given to Broad Street.

An anonymous gift of $100,000 has been made to the Broad Street Hospital, coupled, however, with the provision that the balance of $200,000 needed for the erection of the addition to the hospital be raised by March 1 of this year. The Board of Directors, composed of well known physicians and men in public life, point out that every individual and firm in lower Manhattan should realize that the Broad Street Hospital is a vital factor for the neighborhood as a matter of health insurance only, aside from the question of emergency.

Several admirers of the late Colonel Theodore Roosevelt have pledged themselves, as a memorial to him, to equip and maintain by endowment an elaborate suite of rooms in the addition when it is erected. A number of subscriptions of $5,000, $1,000, and $500, to an amount of $60,000 have been contributed, and the two buildings adjoining the hospital have been purchased and are being held in trust for the expansion.

No income whatever is received by the Broad Street Hospital from either the city or the State for the care of its patients, although it is a public institution giving treatment free as well as for pay. The hospital was opened in September, 1917, with a bed capacity of thirty-five, and three months later the demands of the district were such as to make it necessary to lease the entire building next door. In the first twelve months of operation 1,334 patients were admitted to the institution for treatment.

MURDER MYSTERY DEEPENS.

Body Found in James River That of Woman Reported Dead in Porto Rico.

CINCINNATI, Ohio, Jan. 26.—Cincinnati relatives of Mrs. Sue Tinsley Hadley, wife of Dr. Wilmer Ames Hadley, former army officer, who is being sought on a warrant charging him with the murder of his wife, according to Richmond, (Va.,) authorities, left Cincinnati tonight for Richmond to bring the body to Cincinnati for burial.

Mrs. Hadley's body, which was found lodged in roots of trees in the James River December 30, was identified positively today by friends, according to advices received by Cincinnati relatives.

Mrs. A. H. Evans, sister of Mrs. Hadley, took to Richmond with her tonight two letters she received from Dr. Hadley since the death of his wife. These letters tell of the death of Mrs. Hadley in Porto Rico Nov. 23. Mrs. Evens said she intended to place them in the hands of the Commonwealth Attorney at Richmond.

PLEA FOR FREE ARMENIA.

Congregational Clergymen Send a Message to President Wilson.

That the fundamental principles which inspired the allied democracies in the world war demand the independence of Armenia is the belief of Dr. Lyman Abbott, Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis, and Dr. Charles E. Jefferson, who yesterday sent the following cable message to President Wilson at Paris:

"Seventy-five representatives Congregational ministers throughout the United States join us in the following message:

"We, heartily sympathizing with the aspirations of the Armenian people and speaking for them and for the Christian people of America, ask you to champion the right of Armenia to a free and independent national existence and to reparation, in accordance with that principle which you have so admirably defined in the sentence 'the interest of the weakest is as sacred as the interest of the strongest.' Justice to Armenia is demanded alike by the fundamental principles which inspired the allied democracies in the world war and by specific pledges made by the Entente to the Armenians."

The American committee, which has been formed to work for an independent Armenia, numbers among its members many prominent men and women. The Chairman of the committee is James W. Gerard, and Charles Stewart Davison is Vice Chairman.

WILL SEE HOTEL COMMODORE

10,000 Invitations Have Been Sent Out for Reception Tonight.

There will be a reception in the new Hotel Commodore in Pershing Square tonight, and tomorrow the doors of the second largest hotel in the city will be thrown open to the public. More than 10,000 invitations had been sent out for the reception tonight, the management announced yesterday, while reservations had come from business men in all parts of the country. The employes of the new hotel had their final rehearsal yesterday.

The Commodore has 2,000 rooms, each provided with a bath.

This child is nursed by a healthy mother

LOOK at this baby—fat and healthy, because its mother is strong and vital. Perhaps your child is less fortunate, since you are thin-blooded and run-down, and in no proper condition for the nursing period. Try Gude's Pepto-Mangan, and see how quickly you and your baby will improve.

Gude's Pepto-Mangan

"The Red Blood Builder"

Weak, anemic persons of all ages and conditions are promptly benefited by this splendid general tonic, appetizer, and maker of rich, red blood. It helps to supply the red blood cells with the elements they need to increase their number and oxygen-carrying capacity. Thus the whole system is revitalized and reinvigorated. Pepto-Mangan is easy to digest and exceedingly pleasant to taste. Endorsed and prescribed by the medical profession.

FRIENDLY WARNING
There is only one Pepto-Mangan and that is Gude's. Sold in bottle and package as shown here. Sold by druggists everywhere.

Pierce-Arrow prices will stand

TO eliminate misunderstanding, The Pierce-Arrow Motor Car Company herewith announces its policy with respect to passenger car and motor truck prices.

The prospective buyer who defers his purchase of a Pierce-Arrow car in the expectation of lower prices is denying himself the use of this vehicle without any ultimate benefit. The business man delaying the purchase of a Pierce-Arrow truck in the hope of a better price is meantime losing all the earning or economies of the vehicle without eventual compensating advantage to himself.

Present Pierce-Arrow prices are based on material and labor costs plus a moderate profit. There can be no change in price till these factors are reduced.

Material for cars and trucks must be ordered months in advance of delivery dates. These material prices have not been reduced. Nor has there been any lessening of wages. These, fixed by the cost of living, remain on a wartime basis.

Therefore, we are prepared to announce that until material now in production or on order has been manufactured and sold, present prices on cars and trucks will stand.

Our expectation is that we will have disposed of such product by October 1st, 1919, and we will maintain our prices until that time. The subsequent course to be followed will be dictated by conditions obtaining then, and will be announced at that time.

Quality must be maintained, which makes present prices inevitable until there is a reduction of the fundamentals on which they are based.

TO FIND JOBS FOR SOLDIERS.

Citizens' Committee Takes Action to Help Discharged Men.

The Independent Citizens' Committee, formed as a protest against the membership of William Randolph Hearst on the Mayor's Committee of Welcome to Homecoming Troops, announced yesterday that it would organize an employment committee to find jobs for returning soldiers. Dr. S. Dana Hubbard, acting Director of the Bureau of Public Health Education in the Department of Health, has been appointed Chairman of the committee.

"Thought and attention have been given to the welcome of our soldiers, sailors, and marines," said Dr. Hubbard, but the best and most appropriate welcome is an invitation to the men to return to their former jobs. These boys have sacrificed their personal interests for our protection, and it is our duty to see that they are provided with work that will enable them to resume their former places in life.

"It should be the duty of employers of labor to give these former soldiers, sailors, and marines preference when hiring help. These men are not 'mere job hunters'; they are our highest class of citizenry, whose training and experience will make them a valuable asset to any industry. Those who are crippled will be classified according to their educational and vocational abilities. These men in particular are the ones it is desired to place in self-supporting positions, otherwise, through this handicap, they may have unusual difficulty in securing suitable employment. Whenever possible men should be returned to their former positions as a patriotic duty to our army and navy."

It was also announced yesterday by the Independent Committee that R. Fulton Cutting and Mrs. Casper Whitney had been chosen members of the Executive Committee to assist in plans for the independent welcome.

A mass meeting of greeting to returned soldiers will be held in the Academy of Music in Brooklyn on Wednesday evening by the Brooklyn Victory Celebration Committee. James M. Beck will be the speaker, and a musical program will be given.

TO DEMAND A HIGH SCHOOL.

Washington Heights Residents Will Meet City Officials Tonight.

Borough President Frank L. Dowling, President Robert L. Moran of the Board of Aldermen, former President Thomas W. Churchill of the Board of Education, and Frank Wilsey, a member of the same body, will speak tonight at a mass meeting of Washington Heights mothers and fathers in Public School 132, at Wadsworth Avenue and 182d Street. John Tyrone Kelly, President of the Washington Heights High School League, will preside. A feature of the occasion will be the presence of a number of high school boys and girls on the platform.

The young people are expected to give testimony as to their experiences in the quest of higher education while residing on Washington Heights, which Mr. Kelly terms "the only big centre of population in New York City which has no high school." The city's representatives are expected to tell "why Washington Heights cannot get a high school this year."

The league is made up of all civic and educational organizations of Washington Heights. Its membership includes 8,000 enrolled parents, of whom 4,000 are expected to attend the meeting.

Pneumonia on Increase and Death Rate Jumps—Cops and Sounds Warning.
Influenza and pneumonia are again epidemic in New York, and every resource of the Health Department is being strained to stamp them out. Clicquot Club GINGER ALE

It is with the keenest pleasure that we can now announce that the shortage of Clicquot Club Ginger Ale is over.

Just a little while ago it seemed that the war and the shortage of sugar would mean the temporary disappearance of Clicquot Club from the market, unless we would use some sugar substitute.

Much as we hated to face a temporary suspension of our business, we hated still more to deteriorate or change our standard of years to the effect that "The purest sugar is the only sweetening good enough for Clicquot Club."

Now you can depend upon your dealer for your full supply of Clicquot Club Ginger Ale.

INTERCOLLEGIATE COMMITTEE RULES IN FAVOR OF COLLEGE ATHLETES ENGAGED IN WAR WORK

SUSPEND ONE-YEAR RULE IN COLLEGES

Action of I. C. A. A. A. A.'s May Be Adopted in All Branches of Sport.

AMENDMENTS SUGGESTED

Executive Committee Recommends Restrictions on Discharged Athletes Returning to College.

The Executive Committee of the Intercollegiate Association of Amateur Athletes of America at its meeting at the Columbia University Club yesterday took the lead in the movement to temporarily suspend the one-year rule for college athletes who have been in any branch of the service during the war. The committee decided to recommend to the association at its annual meeting here on March 1 that members of the Student Army Training Corps who have continued in college without interruption will be eligible to compete in the intercollegiates, which are held late in May.

It also recommended that all students are eligible who on or before Jan. 6 were in any branch of the Government service. This includes students who were associated with the Red Cross, Y. M. C. A., and like organizations; also in war work, such as shipyards and munition factories. These students must be back in college by Jan. 6 if out of service before that time, or before April 1 at the latest, and must be in college three weeks after being discharged or resigning from the service.

This action by the I. C. A. A. A. A. will have a sweeping effect in all branches of college sport. Gustavus T. Kirby of Columbia, Chairman of the Advisory Committee, stated that the amendments could be taken as final by all prospective participants without danger of disappointment.

It developed that there was considerable controversy about the suspension of the one-year rule. Following the action of this body yesterday, however, it is believed that it will be adopted for all branches of sports by the governing Faculty committees of every college and university. There has been a wide difference of opinion among college Faculties about suspending the one-year rule. This was done some time ago by the Western College Conference.

The action yesterday was taken on the assumption that the past year in college athletics should not be counted as such against a student athlete on account of the unsettled conditions. The one year rule was primarily passed to bar those students from competition who may have entered colleges for no other purpose than to take part in athletics. The I. C. A. A. A. A. takes the stand that no students have entered any college during the past year for athletics alone.

In other words, the I. C. A. A. A. A. believes that a student should be excused from this athletic handicap inasmuch as during the past year his patriotic duties had preference over any competitive sport in which he may have participated.

A new President of the organization was elected yesterday, Lawrence B. Leonard of Harvard succeeding Julian Bolton of Harvard, who is now in the Government service. Hubert G. Larson, of Columbia, Secretary, and Eldred Halsey of New York University, Treasurer, were present.

The members of the Executive Committee present were: Sherman Baldwin, Yale; Roland Fenner, Pennsylvania; William H. Downs, Princeton; Leon C. Clay, Cornell; Paul N. Anderson, M. I. T.; Max A. Norton, Dartmouth.

Members of the Advisory Committee present included: Gustavus T. Kirby, Columbia, Chairman; Romeyn Berry, Cornell, and Thornton Gerrish, Harvard.

The Faculty Committee was represented by Professor E. P. Andrews, Cornell; Horace G. Fender, Dartmouth, and Major M. J. Pickering, Pennsylvania.

There will be no indoor meet held by the association this year. No intimation was made at the meeting yesterday where the intercollegiates would be held on May 29 and 30, but it is expected that both Harvard and Pennsylvania will make application for the meeting. If the association decides to award the meet to either of these colleges, it is not to be expected that they propose to hold a monopoly on the meeting. It has in the past been held frequently at these two colleges.

The reason for this, however, was because Harvard and Pennsylvania had the best accommodations for the big athletic carnival. Now several other colleges are in a position to hold the meet or will be when conditions become normal again.

Two years ago Cornell applied for the meet, and it is expected that in another year not only Cornell but Princeton, Syracuse, and other colleges will make a bid for it. New York will also make a bid for the college track classic just as soon as there is a suitable stadium built in this vicinity. Plans are now under way to construct a stadium at Van Cortlandt Park and when finished this would be a suitable scene for the big athletic games.

PLAN COLLEGE REGATTA.

American Rowing Association Stewards to Meet Here Saturday.

The annual meeting of the stewards of the American Rowing Association will be held at the Columbia Club Saturday afternoon, when plans will be made for an annual regatta which, it is expected, will include four or five college crews.

Since the temporary suspension of the Poughkeepsie regatta by the Intercollegiate Rowing Association, the American Association becomes the most important college rowing organization. It is expected that Annapolis will make application that the regatta be held on the Severn as it was last year.

That the Yale and Harvard crews may resume their annual race at New London is likely, for in a recent statement Prof. Mather Abbott, the Faculty rowing coach at New Haven, said:

"We hope to race Princeton on the Housatonic course at Derby, making it a triangular meet if Cornell will also enter. There is every intention, provided peace is signed in the mean time, of holding the regular New London regatta the last week in June. Expenses are going to be cut down tremendously. No new equipment will be bought as all material, launches, boats and oars are sufficient for the coming season."

REVIVE COLLEGE LACROSSE.

Ten Institutions Represented at Annual Meeting Here.

College lacrosse is to be resumed on an extensive scale during the Spring, and all the institutions which dropped the sport during the period of the war are prepared to take up the game again. The annual meeting of the United States Intercollegiate Lacrosse League was held at the Park Avenue Hotel yesterday, and a tentative schedule was drawn up which will be announced in a short time.

The officers elected for the coming year were: President, C. H. Goldsmith, Pennsylvania; Vice President, E. S. Barber, Harvard; Secretary, George F. Scanlon, Pennsylvania; members of Executive Committee, Cyrus C. Miller, Crescent A. C., and M. S. Erlanger, Johns Hopkins.

The colleges represented at the meeting were Harvard, Yale, Cornell, Pennsylvania, Swarthmore, Johns Hopkins, Stevens Institute, Hobart, Lehigh, and Syracuse.

Urge Thorley for Commissioner.

Charles Thorley, for many years a member of the New York Athletic Club and a supporter of clean boxing, has been mentioned for chairman of the boxing commission which it is expected Governor Smith will name if a boxing bill is passed at Albany. Those who are urging the appointment of Mr. Thorley point out that as he is a man of independent means and an enthusiast he would be an ideal man to head a commission.

OGDEN AGAIN LEADS AT N. Y. A. C. TRAPS

W. B. Ogden continued his excellent work at the Travers Island traps of the New York Athletic Club yesterday. On Saturday afternoon he took the high scratch prize with a card of 98 out of a possible 100 targets. Yesterday he took the same event with even a better score. In shooting at 100 targets the Nimrod missed only a single "bird." It was his 99th target, giving him a straight run of 88, one of the best runs made at the Winged Foot traps this year.

Being the final Sunday shoot of the month, the usual fixtures came to an end. F. J. Ham was the principal winner. He took the tournament trophy with three legs and also the Byronel Cup with as many more legs scored during the month. The Red Cross and the Accumulation Cup events will be shot off next Sunday, as it was too dark to shoot off the ties yesterday. A. P. Walker was the high handicap gunner of the day.

George J. Corbett, Chairman of the Shooting Committee, made the announcement yesterday that in future shoots for the Club Cup there will be both a handicap and a scratch prize. The Club Cup is a monthly fixture, shot for on Saturdays. At the present time there is only a handicap prize.

Seventeen gunners took part in the shoot yesterday. The conditions were ideal, and as a result the scores were high.

The scores:

Name.	Accum. Cup.	Tour. Cup.	Byr'l Cup.	Scr. & H'cap Cups.
F. J. Ham	4 25	3 25	7 50	89—1—100

To Decide Pool Title.

The championship pocket billiard tournament, which is in progress at Doyle's Broadway Academy, will come to a close this week. Tonight Ben Howe and Norman Vibbard will play, while the final game will be staged Wednesday night between George Barton and Edward Kirby. The latter game will practically decide the first three places. Kirby has won four and lost none, while Barton and Fulton have each won three and lost one. Should Barton win, the affair will be tied between the three mentioned. Much interest is shown in the Barton-Kirby game as the players represent the extreme styles in pool playing. Barton is a daring, spectacular player while Kirby plays with an eye to safety. In the straight rail billiard tourney, Sydney Dickerson is leading a field of seven. Tonight's game will bring together William Calland and Charles Bigelow.

TRAVELENA SETS RECORD.

Distance Runner Clips 19 Seconds from Own Mark in Bronx Race.

Fred Travelena, veteran distance runner of the Mohawk A. C., set a new course record for the Pastime A. C.'s Elks course in the Bronx, in yesterday's Bronx Athletic League handicap road race. The Mohawk veteran, starting from scratch, finished in ninth position in 23:12, eclipsing his own record, made last year, by 19 seconds. Frank Titterton, the Pastime A. C. youngster, refused a handicap of 30 seconds for the chance to do battle with Travelena from scratch. The Pastime athlete, however, was not up to the task of keeping stride with his veteran rival and had to be content with fifteenth position at the finish.

Tim O'Connor, an old campaigner of the St. Anselm's A. C., led home the field of fifteen which completed the full course. O'Connor was in receipt of a handicap of 2 minutes, and he made good use of it. For about half of the four-and one-half miles distance the St. Anselm's runner bent to the task of overtaking the limit handicap runners. Once in the lead O'Connor made his own pace and never was displaced.

About five city blocks from the finish line O'Connor was challenged by J. Flatley, a clubmate. The two runners started off on a spurt with increasing pace at each stride. Flatley weakened in the dash to the tape, however, and trailed twenty yards behind O'Connor. The latter's time was 24 minutes.

The order of finish follows:

Pos.	Name and Club.	Hdcp.	Actual Time.
1	T. O'Connor, St. Anselm's A.C.	2:00	24:00
2	J. Flatley, St. Anselm's A. C.	4:00	26:05

DROP TITLE SWIM MEET.

Intercollegiate Association, Plans Dual Meets Instead.

The Intercollegiate Swimming Association, at its annual meeting yesterday in the New York Athletic Club, decided to abandon its intercollegiate team swimming and water polo championships this year, because of the war. Instead of the title round robin series it is planned to promote dual meets through the remainder of the season. The first of these will probably be held Friday night. Yale swimming authorities are negotiating with Amherst for a dual competition at New Haven on Jan. 31.

The individual intercollegiate championship will be held at City College pool March 22. Yale will swim at Princeton March 8, and the Princeton officials are planning to promote the annual interscholastic championships in conjunction with this dual meet. The proposal to suspend the freshmen rule, and permit the freshmen to compete in varsity sport, was tabled.

W. L. Harris, manager of the Princeton swimming team, is President of the I. C. A. A., W. P. Osmer, Jr., of Pennsylvania, is Vice President, and W. M. Chamberlin, Yale, is secretary-treasurer. These officials were elected at the Spring meeting of the association. Their appointment was ratified yesterday. The meeting was attended by representatives of Yale, Pennsylvania, Princeton, C. C. N. Y., and Columbia University, the regular members of the I. C. A. A., and Massachusetts Institute of Technology and Rutgers, among the associate members.

WHITE OWLS WIN POLO TOURNAMENT

STANDING OF THE TEAMS.	Won.	Lost.	P.C.
White Owls	5	0	1000
Royal A. F.	4	1	.800
Meadowlarks	2	2	.500
Clovers	1	2	.333
Squadron A	1	4	.200
Foxhunters	0	4	.000

The White Owls polo team of the Central Park Riding Academy defeated the Squadron A trio yesterday in the Victory Cup tournament at Durland's Riding Academy by a score of 15½ goals to 6. This success gave the White Owls their fifth straight victory of the tournament. Yesterday's conflict marked the team's last competition. Inasmuch as the White Owls have defeated the other contending teams, the Victory Cup, donated by George Sherman, has been presented to the team.

The victory yesterday was probably the easiest the team scored in its five matches. So far did the Central Park Academy representatives outclass their rivals that there were moments in the game when the White Owls let down noticeably in the offensive efforts. Many goals in the winning team's score also came without any apparent extra exertion.

Squadron A was in receipt of a three-goal handicap, so that the team actually scored but three goals. These were registered, one in the first period and two in the second, by C. Maynard, No. 1.

The White Owls players all contributed goals in overwhelming Squadron A. Murray Wilder and H. R. Winn were the most effective, each scoring six goals, while Otis Coleman, at back, scored four. Wilder in the first period was penalized half a goal for fouling, which brought the team's score to 15½.

The lineups:

White Owls. (15½.)	Squadron A. (6.)
No. 1—M. Wilder.	No. 1—C. Maynard.
No. 2—H. Winn.	No. 2—V. Grimwood.
Back—O. Coleman.	Back—F. Cooke.

Goals—First period, Wilder, (3,) Winn, (2,) Coleman, (2.) Maynard. Second period, Wilder, (3,) Winn, (3,) Coleman, (2,) Maynard, (2.) Penalty—Wilder one-half goal in first period for foul. Handicaps—Squadron A 3 goals. Referee—Earl Hopping, Durland's Riding Academy. Time of periods—Ten minutes.

Mitchell First Over Tape.

Clifford Mitchell of the St. Christopher Club captured first prize yesterday in the Morningside A. C. invitation road race, held over a course of about four and one-half miles. Mitchell took the lead in a field of eight harriers, about one-half mile from the finish. He finished with an advantage of about fifty yards on W. Stokely, a club mate, who set the early pace. Mitchell's time was 25:30.

Mulhearn Wins Road Run.

By a margin of about three yards T. Mulhearn of the St. John's C. C. captured first prize yesterday over L. Szader, Hungarian-American A. C., in the handicap road race of the Yorkville Athletic League. The run was held over the Paulist A. C. course of about three and one-half miles. Mulhearn's time was 24:08. C. Erlenbach, St. John's C. C., won the fast time prize. He started from scratch and finished sixth in 22:22.

HANK GOWDY COMING SOON.

Boston Soldier-Catcher Says He'll Be Back in February.

Hank Gowdy, the catcher of the Boston Braves, who was the first major league ball player to enlist in the army, has written to L. C. Page, one of the stockholders of the Boston Club, that he expects to be back in this country next month.

"I expect to be back in February," Gowdy wrote. "I feel just as if I could jump right into the game and make that long throw or catch hold of a fast one. I play ball every chance I get, and pine to get back into harness in time to be on the Southern training trip.

"Much to our surprise, we are getting bangup treatment from the Germans. They are apparently putting themselves out to be agreeable to us and to see that we get a good impression of them and their country."

Texas Bars Willard Bout.

AUSTIN, Texas, Jan. 26.—Jess Willard and his unselected opponent will not be allowed to have their championship battle in Texas, Governor W. P. Hobby announced today.

JEKEL LEADS HARRIERS.

Wins from Large Field in L. I. A. L. Road Race.

R. Jekel of the Brooklyn A. A. led home a field of fifteen rivals yesterday in the Long Island Athletic League handicap road race, held over the Kings County A. A. course of about four and one-half miles. Jekel, starting with a handicap of 3 minutes 30 seconds, won by about twenty-five yards. The victor's time was 25:49. Fast time prize went to Peter Zabludofsky, Kings County A. A., who started from scratch and finished tenth in 24:26.

The order of finish follows:

R. Jekel, Brooklyn A. A., (3:30.) 25:49; L. Milofsky, Kings County A. A., (2:45.) 25:09; J. Heinsohn, Kings County A. A., (3:30.) 26:27; E. Muller, Brooklyn A. A., (3:00.) 26:01; O. Pollack, Kings County A. A., (4:00.) 27:10; B. Moore, Brooklyn A. A., (3:00.) 26:25; V. Binder, Kings County A. A., (2:00.) 25:45; G. Fredericks, Kings County A. A., (4:00.) 27:48; S. Herzig, Brooklyn A. A., (1:00.) 25:10; P. Zabludofsky, Kings County A. A., (scratch.) 24:26.

HANDICAP AIDS SEINFELD.

Clark House Runner Leads Home Fifteen Rivals.

M. Seinfeld of the Clark House A. A., aided with a handicap of three minutes, showed the way to a field of fifteen rivals yesterday in the Lower Manhattan Athletic League's handicap road race held over the Paulist A. C. course of about three and one-half miles. Seinfeld led J. Cerino of the Paulist A. C. to the tape by about fifty yards. The Clark House runner's time was 23:08. Joe Giorgio of the Paulist A. C. was the scratch starter. He finished ninth in 21:47, the fastest time recorded for the distance.

The order of finish follows:

M. Seinfeld, Clark House A. A., (2:00.) 23:08; J. Cerino, Paulist A. C., (2:45.) 22:10; G. Kirkwood, Paulist A. C., (2:45.) 23:27; S. Inselbach, Clark House A. A., (3:15.) 24:10; E. McManus, Paulist A. C., (2:45.) 23:53; V. Hand, Paulist A. C., (1:30.) 22:54; B. Jacobs, Clark House A. A., (1:45.) 23:11; J. Lewis, Clark House A. A., (2:15.) 23:43; J. Giorgio, Paulist A. C., (scratch.) 21:47; G. Richards, Paulist A. C., (2:45.) 24:48.

Five Clothing Stores

30 Broad — 241 Broadway — 1185 Broadway
44th and Broadway — 42d and Fifth Avenue

This "family tree" began its Rogers Peet outfitting back in the seventies.

We've branched out too.

While originally we did a thriving business, corner of Broadway and Broome, we long ago outgrew it.

Four great stores on "four convenient corners" now needed to care for the present generation.

Character. Not only in the stuff sold, but in the method of merchandising.

Moneyback any time if you want it.

The wholesale end of our business is still another branch. Our clothing is sold throughout the country by the larger dealers in the larger cities.

All Praise the Essex—$1,395

Its Reception the Biggest in all Motordom

Demonstrated to Thousands

In hundreds of cities the same enthusiasm has been created for the Essex that you have observed for it here. Our store has been the center of automobile interest because the Essex strikes a new note in motor car design.

It was our intention to show and demonstrate the Essex for only a few days, not thinking that so many people would want to see it.

Men Like the Essex Because It Stays New

The Essex is as rigidly built as a bridge girder. This you observe as you ride in it over rough pavements. Squeaks and rattles are prevented. Every wearing part is adjustable. The Essex is built to meet the hardest service without becoming noisy.

Buyers Register for Early Deliveries

The first day sales of the Essex passed all expectations. Distributors have had to establish buyers lists. We have orders for more cars than we can get during the early months. Orders are registered as they are placed, so that buyers can get deliveries in their turn.

You should know the Essex if you are interested in the qualities it alone possesses. Come see it. Take a ride in it. It is the only new car of the year.

If your choice lies in the direction of a light car because of its economy in cost and operation, then the Essex will suit you. It has those qualities without the objections that are common to cars of that type. In addition to all that, the Essex has many of the attractions of larger and costlier cars.

But the demand for a car having such features as it exclusively possesses is greater than we imagined.

People are still coming to see the Essex. Thousand in all parts of America have ridden in it in the past ten days.

January 16th, the day of its first showing, was truly an Essex day everywhere.

You Will Know Why When You See the Essex

The Essex meets a demand which it alone satisfies. It is the one car that combines the qualities of lightness and low purchase and operating cost of the cheap car with the desirable features of the large, costly automobiles.

It has grace and beauty. Its appointment in every detail matches that of the finest.

But where it is most distinctive is in its performance. Here is a light car of the greatest riding ease. It has the power of acceleration you have found only in powerful and costly cars.

PRAISE ITALY'S PART IN WINNING THE WAR

NOTABLE IN ENGINEERING

Tribute Paid to Genius of Her Inventors in Ships, Armament, Electricity and Aviation.

Stirring tributes to the part played by Italy in the war, with special reference to some of the achievements of Italian naval men, were paid yesterday in the presence of a distinguished gathering of Italians and Americans at the Metropolitan Opera House. The meeting was held under the auspices of the Italy-America Society and the speakers were Secretary Josephus Daniels of the navy, Charles E. Hughes and Major Fiorello La Guardia, U. S. A. Miss Claudia Muzio and Morgan Kingston of the Metropolitan Opera Company sang. The United States Marine Band played selections and great applause following the playing of "Dixie." Edith Wynne Matthison read Elizabeth Barrett Browning's poem, "Mother and Poet." Robert Underwood Johnson read his poem "Italia Redenta."

Mr. Hughes read messages sent to the meeting by President Wilson, General Diaz, Baron Sonnino, Count Macchi di Cellere, and Elihu Root. Cabling from Paris President Wilson said:

Hon. Charles E. Hughes, Italy-America Society, New York City:
It is with a special pleasure that I avail myself of this opportunity to send a greeting to the Italy America Society gathered together to commemorate the deeds of valor of the Italian Army and the important rôle which it has played in the final success. The cordial and spontaneous welcome given me by the Italian nation three weeks ago touched me profoundly and I am sure I rightly interpret it as a manifestation of sympathy from the Italian people to the people of the United States. WOODROW WILSON.

"I wish today to express the obligations which this republic, which the people of every nation feel particularly to the naval constructors of Italy, for the contributions they have made which have revolutionized naval warfare," Secretary Daniels when he was introduced.

"Every nation is interested deeply in naval studies, in the plans and developments of every other nation, and I wish to say to you that the men of our navy do not look to any country for daring achievement and new methods and ideals more than they do to the naval constructors of Italy. I wish to pay tribute to Cuniberti, the great Italian naval constructor, who was responsible for the all big gun ship, the mother of modern dreadnoughts, and to other daring men of vision who gave us the three-turret ship, which America has copied and for which it gives thanks to the Navy of Italy.

"Nor do we forget the debt the world owes to Marconi, who caused the electric spark to leap at the bidding of man and not to be tied to the cable, so that men on ships speak to each other hundreds of miles apart, but thousands, and space, so far as communication between man and man is concerned, has been annihilated.

"In this war we have come to a new appreciation of an element which from time immemorial has been supposed to be beyond the conquest of man, and yet in the development of aeronautics, with the same vision, with the same daring and the same inventive genius that we have seen in other lines, the Italians have been at the very front in the development of everything that flies the air. I am sure that no gift which came from the generous people of Italy meant more to our President than when Caproni gave him the White Eagle and said, 'I give it to you because America stands high in the atmosphere of everything that makes for good.' But if we pay tribute to Caproni and his fellows, to Marconi and his associates, to the naval constructors who, with an audacious genius, have changed the method of naval construction, what shall we say of the daring and the audacity and the success of the personnel of the Italian Navy?"

Mr. Hughes presided and in introducing Secretary Daniels said:

"As we have had France's day and Britain's day, so this is Italy's day that we may fittingly as Americans pay our tribute to the valor of Italian arms and acknowledge our indebtedness to the men and women of Italy for their sacrifices in our common cause.

"It is simple justice to do this. There were several decisive moments in the war when irreparable disaster was impending. It was the high privilege of each of the Allies to meet one or more of these critical tests, and victory leaves us united in an abiding sense of mutual obligation. France snatched victory from the grasp of the onrushing hordes at the Battle of the Marne. Great Britain maintained the British tradition in the swamps about Ypres. Again, Italy saved the cause of liberty by entering the war, thus defeating the subtle intrigues of the enemy. The Italy of Cavour and Mazzini and Garibaldi took her natural place with the Allies against the Germany of Bismarck and Hindenburg and the Kaiser. In another decisive moment, Italy held her line at the Piave. It remained for the United States after the countless and exhausting sacrifices of the Allies to give the essential assistance, and thus in the last great crisis the final blow was struck which forced the enemy to an unconditional surrender.

"It is happy recognition of the share of each, we pay our tribute to Italy today. Had not Italy entered the war liberty would have been slain before America, her natural defender, had awakened to her duty. No nation save France was exposed to greater danger than that which Italy faced in making her decision. The sacrifices demanded of her people were incalculable. But the heart of Italy was sound and the people of Italy, instinct with the spirit of freedom, demanded the opportunity to make these sacrifices that her noblest aspirations might be satisfied."

Major La Guardia discussed the Italo-Jugoslav question and said that Italy was desirous only of protecting the new Jugoslav nation, not of coveting any of its territories.

Among those present were General E. Guglielmotti, Commendatore Gidoni of the Italian Financial Mission, Rear Admiral Albert Gleaves, Rear Admiral Nathaniel R. Usher, Abram I. Elkus, Commendatore Francolini, Commendatore Serrati, Brig. Gen. Ugo Pizzarello, Captain Angelo Fanelli, Admiral Lovatelli, F. Ferrero, and large delegations from several scores of Italian and American societies.

Ryan Suspect Released.

GALLIPOLIS, Ohio, Jan. 26.—The man suspected of being Captain John T. Ryan, wanted in New York on charges of having violated the espionage and neutrality laws of the United States, was released last night by Sheriff Howard. The authorities here waited sixty hours for a special agent from the Department of Justice to come from New York to identify the man, and on his failure to do so ordered the release of the suspect. The man said he was Gerard C. Leahy, and said he had been employed at the base hospital of the Government powder plant at Nitro, W. Va.

Fevrier to See "Gismonda."

Three hundred members of the Chicago Opera Company are due in New York this morning on two special trains scheduled to arrive at 8 and 9 o'clock at the Grand Central Station. The chorus, orchestra, and stage force are traveling on the first section and many of the principal singers on the second, together with baggage cars containing equipment of the last of the operas sung in Chicago, where a ten weeks' season ended on Saturday with a production of Leroux's "Le Chemineau" and a popular farewell in "The Barber of Seville."

Henri Fevrier will witness the New York première of his opera, "Gismonda," at the opening of the company's five weeks at the Lexington tonight. Charles Fontaine, who sings the tenor rôle, arrived yesterday and went to the Hotel Savoy, while Mary Garden, who will be seen as Gismonda, came in on Saturday and has taken her usual quarters at the Ritz-Carlton. John O'Sullivan, another new tenor, has been here since Friday at the Claridge. Director Campanini, at the Biltmore; Stracciari, at the Ansonia, and M. Fevrier, at the Cumberland, were others here yesterday in advance of the troupe.

Mr. Campanini said, when seen last evening, that he had already found a welcome here in the shape of a larger subscription than last year, when his company played a month's engagement to about $170,000 receipts. The operas of the first week, besides "Gismonda," will include "Romeo and Juliet" tomorrow, then "Madame Butterfly," "Monna Vanna," "Le Chemineau," "Thaïs," and "Tales of Hoffmann." Next Sunday will be the first of four Campanini concerts at the Hippodrome. For the second week there are posted a Monday "Isabeau," and Tuesday "Linda di Chamounix," while Mme. Galli-Curci, who sings in the last named opera, will also appear in a benefit concert at the Hippodrome on Sunday, Feb. 9.

Gatti Announces "Petrushka."

Stravinsky's "Petrushka," last danced here by the Diaghileff Ballet, will be seen in a new production at the Metropolitan on Thursday of next week, Feb. 6, in a double bill with "Traviata." Charles Hackett will be new as Verdi's hero, with Hempel, De Luca, and others. The dancers in "Petrushka," which will follow the opera, will include Galli, Smith, Bolm, Bonfiglio, Bartik, and Agnini, conducted by Monteux.

Leroux's "La Reine Fiammette" will be repeated next Monday, with Farrar, Lazaro, Didur, and Rothier. Caruso will sing Wednesday, Feb. 5, in "Forza del Destino," and Friday in "Pagliacci," preceded by "L'Oracolo," all with familiar casts. "Carmen" will be next week's Saturday matinée opera, with Farrar, Martinelli, and Couzinou, and that evening has "Manon Lescaut," with Muzio, Crimi, and Montesanto.

Tomorrow's special matinee of "Madame Butterfly" at the Metropolitan has been postponed until Thursday afternoon of the present week, because of a slight cold from which Miss Farrar is suffering, according to an announcement made yesterday by Mr. Gatti-Casazza.

Surprises at Opera Concert.

Mr. Godowsky continued a remarkable series of guest appearances by playing at the Metropolitan concert last night, when he was heard in Liszt's A major concerto with the opera orchestra under Hageman and in later solo pieces at the piano. Mme. Matzenauer was also welcomed back by the Sunday night crowd, and Rosalie Miller, a newcomer, sang a soprano air from Massenet's "Herodiade." Next Sunday's added star will be Mischa Elman.

Old-time operagoers must have recalled a famous performance of Mme. Sembrich, at the Abbey benefit in 1883, when last night's young soprano came out for an encore, for Miss Miller, instead of further singing, played the violin. A still greater surprise was in store when Mme. Matzenauer, after the "Suicidio" air—a soprano number—from "Gioconda," and some lighter songs, gave on recall "When the Boys Come Home," and finally asked the entire audience to join her in "The Long, Long Trail."

Pianists Have Their Day.

Guiomar Novaes, gowned in black, yet glorious at one of her native Brazil's "mourning coat" butterflies that flashes fire in the tropic sun, was greeted by a great house on her return to the stage after a brief absence at yesterday's Philharmonic matinée in Carnegie Hall. In Saint-Saëns's C minor concerto the admired pianiste found music of congenial mood, tender, elegiac, a performance that her hearers will remember.

W. H. Humiston conducted his "Suite" of four short sketches, once written for a MacDowell festival, and later, in a version for piano and violin, widely played by Maud Powell. The second sketch in the new orchestra version, "Scherzoso, ma cantabile," was received with applause. Mr. Stransky opened the day with Franck's symphony and finished with Wagner's prelude and finale from "Tristan."

American Composers, Too.

Ossip Gabrilowitsch, on a runaway holiday from his labors as conductor of the Detroit Orchestra, reappeared at short notice with the Symphony Society in Aeolian Hall yesterday afternoon, playing Tschaikovsky's concerto with dynamic effect, even magnified by the little hall and by Mr. Damrosch's supporting orchestra of a hundred. It was an occasion to pair with the recent sensational reappearance of Rachmaninoff. The symphony for the day was Raff's "Lenore," lighter in manner for all its tragic theme.

The American composer, C. M. Loeffler, came in for his innings, too, with "La Vilanelle du Diable," a tone poem of rare coherence and brevity, superbly played by virtuoso instruments for which its mesmeric harmonies are scored.

DINNER FOR GREEK ENVOY.

Friends to Entertain Roussos Before He Leaves for Paris.

George Roussos, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of Greece in the United States, who leaves soon to join Premier Venizelos in Paris, will be tendered a farewell dinner on Wednesday night in Sherry's by some of the friends he made during his eighteen months in this country. Mr. Roussos was for twenty-five years a leader of the international bar in Egypt, where he became a close friend of the late Lord Kitchener.

Among those who have accepted invitations to the dinner are Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, Chauncey M. Depew, Thomas W. Lamont, A. Barton Hepburn, Frank A. Munsey, William Fellowes Morgan, Alfred H. Marling, Eugenius H. Outerbridge, Henry A. Gildersleeve, Charles R. Miller, Emerson McMillin, F. Cunliffe-Owen, R. A. C. Smith, and George T. Wilson.

British Industries to Hold Fair.

The British Industries Fair, organized by the British Board of Trade, will be held in London in the Pennington Street premises of the London Dock from Feb. 24 to March 7, it was announced yesterday. About 600 British manufacturers will exhibit china and earthenware, glassware of all descriptions, stationery and stationers' sundries, printing, fancy goods, toys, and sporting goods. This fair differs from those at Lyons and Bordeaux in that it is not international.

105,753 STILL IN HOSPITALS.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.—General Pershing has issued instructions requiring each soldier in France to send to his next of kin in this country a card showing the soldier's station, organization and the state of his health, and special cards are being printed for this purpose. This is part of a plan for keeping families informed as to the status of soldiers in France.

Information has been received by the War Department that on Jan. 9 there were 105,753 soldiers in hospitals in France, of which 33,111 were cases of wounds or injuries, the rest representing cases of disease. The battle casualty records have now been checked completely in France and the War Department is now making public the balance of the casualties as rapidly as it can complete its recheck from original records.

"Cable advices from General Pershing," said the official statement, authorized by the War Department today, "indicate that the long and tedious check of battle casualty reports has at last been completed by the Central Records Office in France. Individual additions resulting from the identification of missing men or from the triple check of all organization and hospital records, instituted by the direction of the Secretary of War, may, of course, be expected and will be promptly reported—as will deaths from illness or accident. In general, however, the lists of those who died in action or received serious injuries, as reported to the families of officers and soldiers, and to the press, stand complete.

"In the meantime the War Department is engaged upon a check of the original records sent for the purpose from France, in order to report both to the families and to the public, as a matter of record and appreciation, the men who have received (and recovered from) relatively slight injuries on the field of battle.

"The report of Jan. 9 shows a total of 105,753 men in hospitals in France, of which 72,642 were cases of disease and 33,111 cases of wounds and injuries. The deaths for the previous week amounted to 561, of whom 280 died of disease and 281 of wounds received in action before Nov. 11, 1918.

"The total number of hospital cases in France is steadily decreasing, there being a drop of more than 15,000 cases between the figures given above and those of the week previous."

TO CURB SALE OF PISTOLS.

Commissioner Enright Asks Merchants' Association to Help the Police.

In connection with the recent series of violent crimes, the Merchants' Association yesterday announced that Police Commissioner Enright had asked the co-operation of that organization in an effort to check the sale of revolvers in violation of the Sullivan law. In a letter to William Fellowes Morgan, President of the association, Mr. Enright said in part:

"With a view to depriving potential criminals of the weapons with which to attempt crimes of violence, the Mayor and myself have been endeavoring to obtain the co-operation of the New Jersey authorities so that only those with Police Department permits could purchase them in New Jersey. It came as a surprise to me to learn that reputable sporting goods stores in this city were rumored to be encouraging the illegal sale of revolvers.

"It appears that employes of establishments where firearms are sold in this city have told prospective customers who did not possess permits that the weapon could be sent by express to a New Jersey address. Your organization has so graciously co-operated with the Police Department in the past that I think it only just that you should be advised of this practice, as I am sure that the proprietors of reputable sporting goods stores would never encourage or permit such practices on the part of their employes were they familiar with them."

The association at once sent copies of the Police Commissioner's communication to stores throughout the city, but the replies received up to yesterday indicated that nowhere were revolvers being sold in the way described by Mr. Enright.

SET FREE BY LLOYD GEORGE

Couple Convicted of Trying to Poison Him Were Serving Long Terms.

LONDON, Jan. 26, (via Montreal.)—Alfred George Mason and Mrs. Winifred Mason, his wife, have been ordered released from prison on license by the Home Secretary, at the request of Premier Lloyd George.

They were convicted in February, 1917, of conspiracy to murder the Premier.

A sentence of seven years was imposed upon Mason, and Mrs. Mason was sentenced to five years' penal servitude in March of last year on conviction of a conspiracy to murder Premier Lloyd George and Arthur Henderson, member of the War Council, by means of poison. Mrs. Alice Wheeldon, mother of Mrs. Mason, also was found guilty of the conspiracy. The mother was sentenced to ten years. Miss Harriet Ann Wheeldon, another daughter, was acquitted.

FOR ZIONIST CAMPAIGN.

Seven Captains Are Named to Speed Drive Throughout Country.

Plans for the campaign to raise $3,000,000 for the Zionist Organization of America were discussed at a dinner in the Hotel Astor last night at which Jacob H. Schiff and Judge Julian W. Mack, President of the organization, spoke. Seven captains were appointed to push the campaign in all parts of the country. They were: Jacob Fishman, Clarence Y. Palitz, Edward Reuben, Louis Posner, L. Wourgaft, Dr. Mordecai Kaplan, and Mrs. Julius Dreyfus.

Among those who made addresses in addition to Mr. Schiff and Judge Mack were Dr. Mordecai Kaplan, Bernard A. Rosenblatt, and Dr. Israel Friedlaender.

Junior Naval Reserve Buys Cruiser.

Schuyler Schieffelin, now a Captain in the American Forces in France, has sold to the United States Junior Naval Reserve his motor cruiser Swordfish, now at Miami, Fla. The Swordfish is 123 feet in length and there are only two larger craft of her type in this country. The Reserve will re-name the vessel the Commodore Jacob W. Miller, in memory of the late Vice President of the organization, and will convert the new purchase into a motor training ship for use of cadets at Camp Daniels, the Winter training base of the Reserve at West Palm Beach, Fla.

THEATRE NOTES.

Mrs. Fiske, in "Mis' Nelly of N'Orleans," will begin an engagement at Henry Miller's Theatre next Monday night under the direction of Cohan & Harris. The play is a comedy by Lawrence Eyre.

At the Manhattan Opera House on Saturday night Marjorie Rambeau returned to her success of last season, "Eyes of Youth," for an engagement limited by her early departure for London.

"Good Morning, Judge," a musical comedy, based on Pinero's farce, "The Magistrate," will be brought to the Shubert Theatre on Monday of next week. Mollie King, George Hassell, and Charles King will head the cast.

The present program of the Portmanteau Theatre will end its run on Saturday night, and a new bill will be offered at the Punch and Judy next week, when Dunsany's play, "The Gods of the Mountain," will be revived.

"Tumble Inn" has been selected as the final title of the musical comedy which Arthur Hammerstein now has in preparation.

Flora Revalles, formerly of the Russian ballet, will be seen in the new Winter Garden show, "Monte Cristo, Jr."

Fifteen hundred members of the Federal Reserve Club will attend tonight's performance of "Listen, Lester" at the Knickerbocker.

Georges Flateau, now in "The Crowded Hour," will continue next season under the management of the Selwyns.

The Friars will send a Frolic on tour about June 1, visiting the large cities of the East and Middle West.

THE SCREEN

D. W. Griffith has turned from the war to peace for a screen subject and produced, as his third Artcraft picture, "A Romance of Happy Valley," which is at the top of the Strand bill this week. When the story begins a number of people are living in Happy Valley, "far from the madding crowd," and apparently they are happy, all of them except John L. Logan, Jr., who frankly admits that he is miserable and wants to go to New York. John's mother takes him to church and asks the parson to save him from sin, John's father sternly advises him to stay at home and hoe the corn, and John's sweetheart puts on a new dress in the hope of luring his heart from the city. But John packs up one night and goes away, and, as the years pass, the Happy Valley folks become miserable. John's mother seeks consolation in religion, his father goes into debt, and his sweetheart writes herself down as an old maid.

Away off in the city John spends seven years resisting temptation and inventing a mechanical frog that can swim. He is successful in both efforts and returns to Happy Valley with his character intact and $10,000, which he got for the frog. He is just in time to save the old home from going under the hammer and his sweetheart from becoming an old maid irrevocably. Only an accident prevents his father murdering him for his money before the old man learns the intended victim is his son and he can have as much of the money as he wants without committing a crime.

The part of John, the wayward son who showed all the others the way to live, is played by Robert Harron, whose impersonation adds to the already accumulated evidence of his versatility as a screen actor. Lillian Gish, as his sweetheart, is a sufficient reason for his returning home. George Fawcett, as the father, and Kate Bruce, as the mother, do not disappoint the expectations aroused by their past performances.

The Strand Topical has a number of interesting features, including "Bobby Bumps's Last Smoke," a cartoon comedy by Earl Hurd of the Bray Studios which has more laughs in it than many of Bobby's previous adventures.

Max Marcin's "Cheating Cheaters," familiar on Broadway through its stage run, has been turned into a photoplay for Clara Kimball Young, under the direction of Allan Dwan, and is on the program of the Rivoli this week. The story of the syndicate of crooks who set out to rob another equally respectable company which was also bent on robbing them is too well known to need narration. As a photoplay the production is marked by well-acted comedy. Of course, there is the lovers' clinch at the end. Miss Young, though not one of the comic characters, makes the others more amusing than they would be without her, and, on her own part, is both attractive and expressive. She is well supported by Jack Holt.

Tully Marshall as the lawless lawyer gives an interpretation that needs no textual or other aids. It stands out as a work of pantomimic art and, incidentally, so strongly suggests Uriah Heep that it makes one wish to see Mr. Marshall in the rôle of Dickens's character. Mayme Kelso and Frank Campeau contribute generously to the amusement of the play.

"Bird Island," a Prizma color picture, includes some interesting scenes of the United States Game Preserve of the coast of California, and, except where the motion is apparently too rapid, the coloring seems accurate and adds greatly to the pictures.

"Go West, Young Man," with Tom Moore in the leading rôle, and "Little High Horse," a Bruce scenic, are the principal pictures at the Rialto this week.

Allen Holubar's "The Heart of Humanity," with Dorothy Phillips, is in its sixth week at the Broadway.

Burton Holmes's Travelogue, "With the Yanks in France," was the offering at Carnegie Hall last night and will be repeated there this afternoon.

START FILM TAX PROTEST.

Public Aid Sought in Every Motion-Picture House in America.

The Executive Committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry announced yesterday that, at a meeting held Saturday afternoon it was decided to start a nation-wide campaign of protest against the tax of 5 per cent. on all film rentals provided for in the Federal Revenue bill now in the hands of the Conference Committee of Congress. The intention of the bill is to levy this tax on the weekly rentals paid for films by exhibitors, and it will be in addition to the 10 per cent. admission tax.

The film men have sent 500-word telegrams to the forty-eight State Chairmen of their association, instructing each to relay his message to every proprietor of a motion picture theatre in his State. A telegram has also been sent to Peter J. Schaefer, President of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, urging him to join in the fight. The committee hopes to enlist the active support of the public, who, it is contended, will have to pay the tax in the end in the form of increased admission fees.

SUNDAY SHOWS IN PASSAIC.

Movie Houses and Churches Both Do Well Under New Ordinance.

PASSAIC, N. J., Jan. 26.—Despite the protest of the Passaic Pastors' Association, the movement started three weeks ago to open the motion picture houses on Sundays resulted today in all the theatres doing a thriving business. No disorder was reported and the churches had the usual attendance.

At a meeting of the City Commissioners several weeks ago 200 or more citizens, including many clergymen, protested against the revocation of the local ordinance forbidding Sunday shows. Later Commissioner John H. Kehoe, in charge of the police, was assured by the ministers that even if the local ordinance should be revoked an old blue law, the "Crimes and Immorality act," prohibited such desecration of the Sabbath.

The ordinance was repealed last week.

HEROES FILL HIPPODROME.

5,500 Wounded Soldiers Are Guests at Big Theatre's Show.

More than 5,500 wounded men, many of them brought to the theatre in ambulances which lined up over some four blocks, attended a special performance of the Hippodrome show, "Everything," yesterday afternoon. Every member of the Hippodrome organization, back stage and front, gave his or her services for the occasion. An address of welcome was made by Justice Victor J. Dowling.

In the evening free performances of two shows were held for uniformed men, "East Is West," at the Astor, and "Cappy Ricks," at the Morosco, the first five rows in each theatre being reserved for men with wound stripes.

Sing and Play in Uniform.

George Reimherr, tenor, came back from army service to sing in uniform at the Princess Theatre last evening, his recital including Japanese folksongs arranged and accompanied by Koscak Yamada, who wore a uniform of the Japanese Army. There were two songs of Lieutenant Emil Breitenfeld, accompanied by Francis Moore, among local composers, with others from MacDowell, Eugene Haile, Frederick Vanderpool, Cecil Forsyth, and Gertrude Ross.

THE INSTRUMENT OF QUALITY

Sonora

CLEAR AS A BELL

Supreme in Tone!

EXAMINE the Sonora critically. Study the long-running motor, the tone control at the sound source, the convenient envelope filing system, the universal tube for playing all makes of disc records perfectly without extra attachments, the improved sound box, the matchless curved design lines of the cabinet, etc., and you'll see why Sonora is unequalled.

Above all, Sonora's tone quality is what has made it famous, and for this it received the highest score at the Panama-Pacific Exposition.

THE PEACE OF ALL NATIONS.

A long step forward toward the attainment of peace on earth was taken by the Conference at Paris on Saturday when it unanimously resolved to establish a League of Nations. It was a splendid beginning of the work of the Conference. To the many international distinctions of the City of Paris another and one most appropriate has been added, for it was fitting that a people whose heroism, achievements, and sufferings in war have been so great should see the first constructive work upon this pact of the nations to end war undertaken in their own capital.

When the establishment of a League of Nations is moved by the United States, seconded by Great Britain, cordially welcomed and supported by Italy, France, Belgium, China, Poland, and unanimously voted by the great council of the nations, we may dismiss all doubts about the practicability and the realization of the project. "If we attempt it, the attempt will be a success," said Mr. LLOYD GEORGE. What the civilized world attempts for the furtherance of the ends of civilization cannot fail.

The structural plans of the League are taking shape in the minds of the delegates to the Conference. Many things that have been proposed have been for years under discussion, have been discarded or are on their way to rejection. There will be no attempt to set up a Parliament of Nations, making laws for member nations; no super-nation is possible. That would be a reversion to the idea of the Holy Roman Empire, which is of no such happy memory that men of the present day would choose it as the model of an international association for justice. Thus one obstacle to the adoption of the plan, pretty certainly a fatal one, is removed. The project of creating a great military force to compel obedience to the decrees of the League goes by the board with the super-sovereignty proposal. As the thoughts of students of the subject have become clarified by reflection and discussion the idea of setting up a grand constable to cudgel the nations into the ways of peace has been treated with ever-increasing reserve or abandoned altogether. There will be constraint to bring offenders to their senses, but the plan now favored is that the nations shall put economic and financial pressure upon covenant-breaking States; they will be isolated by decrees of nonintercourse, precisely as if they were at war with all the world. There will always be a possibility that fleets or armies may be used against them, but it is unlikely that membership in the League will, ipso facto, pledge every nation to the use of military force. The United States, which makes war only when Congress declares war, could not enter into a general agreement to engage in future wars, even for the sake of enforcing peace.

The covenant of peace will be the very soul of the League. The principle has long been familiar. The nations will agree with each other not to go to war without reference of the matter in dispute to arbitration or to the Conference which will be established by the League. The Conference will ascertain the facts and make recommendations. Until the Conference has reported its findings and recommendation the parties to the dispute will be pledged not to make war. The principles involved are already applied in our numerous arbitration treaties. Passion cools by delay, or, as it has been called by many writers, the moratorium. Where instant and continuing injury is threatened, measures of relief such as are provided in Anglo-Saxon equity jurisprudence have been proposed; in default of other remedies the moratorium may be suspended, the oppressed nation permitted to take up arms in defense of its rights, and other States may give aid.

Current advices from Paris indicate that these provisions will be found in the framework of the League. There will, of course, be many others, much detail. There will be difficulties, but, as Mr. THEODORE MARBURG has said, "the united purpose of the civilized "world may confidently be counted "upon to solve them all."

It was in no spirit of empty compliment that the honor of moving the establishment of a League of Nations was accorded to President WILSON. He has been the most conspicuous advocate of the plan, tireless in his championship of the great principle, and the American people, with their ardent love of peace and horror of war, give him whole-hearted support in his efforts to still, forever if it may be, the clash of arms. Nor are the peoples of the other great Powers of the alliance less firmly resolved than ourselves, and it is too plain for anybody's denying that their Governments, faithfully representing them, are moved by the same desire, that justice and peace shall be the law of earth.

For that reason we think Mr. WILSON might well be on his guard against the further use of phrases which seem to imply that in this matter Governments stand apart as something different from the people they represent. When he said in proposing the League of Nations that "the select classes of mankind are no "longer the governors of mankind; "the fortunes of mankind are now in "the hands of the plain people of the "whole world," we need for the understanding and justification of the remark the commentary supplied somewhat further on in the address, by his condemnation, as the authors of the war, of "a small coterie of civil rulers and military staffs." In this country we are all plain people, we do not need to be reminded of any distinctions. Nor is there need to draw the distinction anywhere in respect to the league for peace, which was the theme of Mr. WILSON's discourse. There is, we fear, some chance that these phrases may be misunderstood.

But there are always and everywhere "select classes of mankind," and everywhere save in lands given over to anarchy, as at present in Russia, those select classes, of whom WOODROW WILSON is a shining example, have been leaders in government, guides in shaping the fortunes of mankind. Intelligence, knowledge, and the willingness to "scorn delights and live laborious days" in the effort to give the plain people, all the people, the blessings of order and liberty and peace are the qualifications for membership in this select class, now so numerously represented at the Peace Conference. Let it be remembered that the League of Nations still will be the creation of a select class of highly intelligent men, all having nothing so much at heart as the interests of "the plain people," including themselves. From the dawn of history the plain people have had the good sense to understand that if they are to have government they must have leaders, representatives.

A SOCIETY MEETING.

Here in the United States a society or league of some sort is founded and breaks into too usually unregarded speech about every five minutes of the day and evening. Here, so to speak, there were nations of leagues long before a League of Nations was more than a nebulous theory. Here associations and sodalities pullulate innumerably, and most of us delight to give our views upon things in general by means of divers solemn troops and societies to which we pay our allegiance and dues. Here, therefore, there will be a pleasant, an almost tender, comprehension of the lyric fervor said to be shown by the Franco-Slav Society of Paris.

When the Paris dispatches tell us of a meeting of the Franco-Slav Society, where speeches were made by Mr. FRANKLIN-BOUILLON and Mr. ANDRE CHERADAME, as well known in New York as at home, and that the Franco-Slavs believe that "a union "can be effected with the American "opponents of WILSON's policies, "particularly the Republican Sen"ators, and a propaganda undertaken "in the United States which will "cause the curtailment of the Presi"dent's activities in Russia"; that tell of a report that the Franco-Slavs "are endeavoring to persuade "the Peace Conference that WILSON "should be considered not as Pres"ident, but as a party leader whose "views are out of harmony with "those of many of his own country"men," we are sure at once that the "report" is the work of some malicious fumiste joking at the pragmatical spirit of coteries and little groups.

Talk of the "union" of however an earnest foreign society with Republican Senators against Mr. WILSON, and of propaganda in the United States against him, must be mere blague, too. One can't think it Slav. French it can't be, for it is not good taste, good sense, good manners. Surely Mr. FRANKLIN-BOUILLON and Mr. CHERADAME, who know the United States well, protested in their speeches against the course said to have been advocated. If the whole business be not an invention of some humorist of the Boulevards, it can only be explained as a comic efflorescence or deliberate burlesque on the self-delusions of societies and little senates, giving orders to the world. At any rate in this land of "joiners" the divagations of the society spirit are sure of sympathetic commiseration.

ITALIAN SENTIMENT.

The actual merits of either side of the Italian-Jugoslav controversy have become pretty well obscured, in the last few months, by the feelings roused in the two nations through the revival of ancient grievances and the creation of new ones. It is regrettable that what was often no more than tactlessness could drive great peoples toward a state of mind which tends to continue international enmity, but it has happened before and elsewhere; and we can only recognize that it has happened again, and that efforts to obtain a reasonable and lasting settlement of the Adriatic question must, as a matter of method at least, take account of the feelings so aroused.

A letter published in another column presents very clearly an indication of the grounds for suspicion of the Jugoslavs, and for resentment at support in other countries of the Jugoslav cause, which is felt very generally by Italian liberals. Of the highly superheated emotions of extremists this does not speak; it gives the reason why many Italians who sincerely revere the principles of MAZZINI are slow to admit that these principles can be regarded as justifying the Jugoslav program. Among the Jugoslavs there are also extremists not amenable to argument; there are also moderate men who have had their suspicions of Italy roused by errors on the other side. When the world once understands the nature and character of what may be called the irreducible minimum of nationalist sentiment, the feeling of those men who want international justice but are afraid to trust the other party to this particular controversy, it will be easier to lay before the world the unreasonable demands of the imperialists of both sides, to show their weaknesses, and to arrive at some agreement.

CONGRESS INDICTS ITSELF.

There has never been before Congress a greater accumulation of pressing business than now. The largest war tax in world history is in dispute between the houses on several points, including the most important and contentious single point in it. The deficiency is so great that it is necessary that the largest loan in the country's history shall be authorized, and the best means of borrowing six billions is yet to be determined. Not one of the appropriation bills has been passed, and they are for record sums. Provision must be made for fulfillment of the Government's undertaking to pay $2.26 a bushel for a billion bushels of wheat, a "revolving fund" of several hundred million dollars being the least sum needed. The Census bill should be passed, and on the census figures much legislation and business enterprise depend. Time enough has been wasted to have put some railway policy in the way of adoption, but the question is under discussion from the bottom as though thirty-two years' experience has taught nothing to anybody in Washington. There is a proposal to write off a billion of the shipbuilding costs as loss, and there are no signs of any policy regarding the use of the $2,000,000,000 investment which remains. The shipbuilding dilemma rivals the railway question in relation to Government finances, for the Treasury has lost only a quarter billion in railway operation as yet, and the loss of the owners of the railways concerns them rather than the Treasury. Sundry questions of demobilization and reconstruction may be thrown in for good measure.

This incomplete list makes it sure that it cannot be disposed of discreetly by Congress, or beneficially to the country, within the month of legislative days which remains before Congress adjourns by limitation of law. The bills will be sent to the Senate in a pile, and passed without being read by those who vote upon them. The Secretary of the Treasury has repeatedly expressed embarrassment in the conduct of the nation's business, and each time Congress has added a few days to the delay predicted. Feb. 1 was the last day the Treasury thought it was possible to delay beginning the collection of taxes, and Mr. KITCHIN thinks the bill may be passed by Feb. 10. Meanwhile business men cannot close their accounts for last year, or make out their inventories, as values are shifting daily; they cannot tell what provision they must make for taxes.

Including loans and taxes, the country must find twelve billions or so within a few months, and that is burdensome even for a country as rich as ours. The situation is so serious for the Treasury that the Secretary has said that he will not wait for the President to sign the Tax bill, but will take it for granted, and proceed without warrant of law. Perhaps some will wait to see what the bill means before they pay their taxes, or perhaps the taxes will be collected under existing law, and the difference between that and the new law be adjusted by revision of the tax accounts. The worst way may be the only way.

The body which manages its own business in this manner is the body which tells business men how to manage their business. It is the same body which complains that the President drives it too hard, and assumes too much of the work and responsibility of the co-ordinate branch of Government. It is the body which the country rebuked at the last election, and whose mandate might well have ceased on the New Year's Day following election. It is not to be supposed that a Congress coming to power just after election would affront the country in this manner. Whatever Congress may now do, the memory of what it has done and has not done will handicap the party in the next national election. Its domestic opportunity was as great at home as the President's has been abroad. If Congress had equaled the President in rising to the task which conditions laid upon each of them, the feeling of the country would have been one of elation and confidence, instead of confusion and embarrassment, if not almost dismay.

QUEER RESULTS OF GERMAN EDUCATION.

In the official catalogue of sixty-two pacifists, men and women, whom the Senate committee investigating German propaganda, selecting them out of more than 100 candidates, finds to have been active in various movements which are urbanely described as not having helped the United States in the war, it is interesting to note a fat percentage of American graduates of German universities. A man like former Professor KUNO FRANCKE is a German, pure and simple, and does not properly belong in this galley. If former Dean KIRCHWEY got in the wrong boat, he jumped out when the war began, supported the United States, and is unjustly recorded. Doubtless other persons whose names are on the roll will seek to have them stricken off, or deny that they are rightly on it, as Miss LILLIAN WALD does. With its accuracy or its completeness the reader gifted with sociological inquisitiveness has nothing to do, but the effect, relation, or coincidence of so many pacifists partly bred in the land of militarism fills his innocent soul with amaze.

Searching reverently in "Who's Who," you read of Professor BADE of the University of California, University of Berlin, 1905-6; Professor BUSHEE of Colorado College, Berlin, 1911; JOHN LOVEJOY ELLIOTT, Halle, 1894; Dr. THOMAS C. HALL, Berlin and Göttingen, 1882-3; Commissioner FREDERIC C. HOWE, Halle; Professor HULL of Swarthmore, Berlin, 1891; Rabbi MAGNES, Heidelberg, 1902; Professor SCHMIDT of Cornell, Berlin, 1890; Professor CLARENCE AURELIUS SKINNER of Tufts, Berlin, 1896-9; Dr. J. P. WARBASSE of Brooklyn, postgraduate medical student at Göttingen and Vienna.

We have, then, in a catalogue that includes a number of persons not educated in colleges and a number of persons to whom "Who's Who's" portal of fame has not opened, ten out of sixty-two official pacifists who got some part of their education among the German tribes. It would be rash to draw any conclusion; wildly fanciful to see in these paciferous pupils any confirmation of the ingenious theory that Deutschland loved peace über Alles, sowed it, taught it, radiated it, in vain, alas! since her envious encircling foes thirsted for war. The ten among the numerous monuments of the great German Ph. D. Age serve to stimulate harmless speculations on the effect of environment.

GOVERNOR ALLEN ANSWERED.

The losses in the Argonne Forest of the 35th Division, (Kansas and Missouri National Guard,) which Governor HENRY J. ALLEN proclaimed as excessive in a harangue at Topeka recently on the day of his inauguration as Governor of Kansas—he was a Red Cross and Y. M. C. A. worker in France and not a combatant—must be studied in connection with the official record of the killed in service furnished by Secretary BAKER to the Rules Committee of the House of Representatives. To this committee a resolution calling for an investigation had been referred. Mr. BAKER reported that the losses of the division in killed and fatally wounded from the day it landed in France until Nov. 7 were 827, or about 5 per cent. of the complement of 16,000 officers and men. Compared with casualties of the same kind suffered by Union troops in our civil war this is not remarkable.

The 1st Maine Heavy Artillery, 2,202 strong, which did not take the field until May, 1864, lost 19.2 per cent. in killed and dead of wounds. Of two hundred Union regiments that went into action not one lost less than 10 per cent. in killed and fatally wounded, and the average was from 13 to 14 per cent. Their terms of service of course varied, and their exposure to the fire of the enemy was not the same. In a single battle there were sometimes more men killed and fatally wounded in a regiment in proportion to complement than was the case with the 35th Division during its service in France. At Cold Harbor the 8th New York Heavy Artillery had 207 officers and men killed or fatally wounded. Its enrollment was 2,575, a total that included many noncombatants. At Petersburg the 1st Maine Heavy Artillery (enrollment 2,202) had 210 killed and fatally wounded. The Second Army Corps at Gettysburg had a heavier percentage of loss in fatalities than the 35th Division suffered in France during its entire period of service.

These figures of civil war casualties are presented to show that even if the 35th Division was not properly supported by artillery, which General MARCH denies, it was not led to appalling slaughter. What of the wounded? it may be asked. Governor ALLEN has declared that the total casualties were 7,000 in the Argonne Forest. This would be painful if true. Governor ALLEN says that it was the estimate of officers at the front—a rough guess at the best. In our civil war estimates of officers on a field of battle were often proved to be wide of the mark, almost invariably so. The official records told another story. Secretary BAKER is not able at this time to announce the casualties of all kinds incurred by the 35th Division in the Argonne fighting. General MARCH thinks that the casualties indicated from the known dead were low; in regard to this conclusion it may be said that the ratio of Union wounded to killed at Gettysburg was 4.7, at Shiloh 4.7, at Antietam 4.5, at Spottsylvania 4.9, in the Wilderness 5.3, at Mine Run 6.3.

Governor ALLEN in his strictures upon the high command declared that soon after the advance began in the Argonne Forest the 35th Division did not have adequate artillery support—hence the excessive losses. By the way, the 16,000 men of the 35th Division were only a small part of the whole American force engaged in the Argonne, which was 300,000 officers and men. General MARCH says that they had 4,000 guns behind them, and that the infantry never got beyond artillery support. Secretary BAKER asks for a thorough investigation of the charges of Governor ALLEN that the 35th Division was sacrificed to incompetence of staff, ordnance, transportation, commissariat, and medical management. "It was a well-planned battle," (in the Argonne,) says General MARCH, and he knows more about it than the noncombatant and notetaker who is now Governor of Kansas.

By all means let there be inquiries when there is any real basis for such serious charges as are now being made on the stump and in Congress by gentlemen more full of emotion than of facts. The moral of the rejoinder of Secretary BAKER and General MARCH to Governor ALLEN is that hearsay is likely to get the worst of it in a bout with the official record.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

Wholesale Prices and Retail. While announcing the glad news that food prices already had decreased a good deal and soon would go down a lot more, the Chairman of the Federal Food Board admitted that hereabout the retailers, for the most part, were still keeping to or near the old high figures. That, he said, was because their present stocks were bought while the war was on, or before wartime restrictions were ended, and he added that as soon as these stocks were sold the retail prices would also be lowered.

Apparently he thought this a right, or at least a natural, course for the retailers to pursue, and, as a matter of fact, it is easy to understand their disinclination to take a loss if they can help it. None of us really would like that. But the political economists, or most of them, have always contended that when wholesale prices advanced a retailer was under no obligation to refrain from putting up his own prices until after he had disposed of stock bought by him before the rise. Indeed, he has been advised that it was almost or quite his duty to mark up his goods at once, lest something vaguely terrible should happen to "distribution."

Why this was so has never been very clearly understood by the retailer's customers, but the retailers themselves, or at least the great majority of them, have been enthusiastically sure that the economists were right and their advice excellent. Now and then an exceptional retailer has vaunted his intention to keep his prices down until the cheaply bought goods were all gone, but he usually has been suspected of having what are called "ulterior motives" in his violation of custom—a suspicion which his fellow-retailers assured all inquirers was well founded.

A Higher Law at Work. No rule, as far as can be recalled, has been laid down as to what, when wholesale prices fall, should be done by the retailer with goods bought high. Probably it was not considered of any use to do so, but it does seem hard that the customer should get the worst of it in both cases—and harder still that he should get it with the approval, or acquiescence, of a Federal Food Director.

While studying these mysteries as to the relation between wholesale and retail prices one notices that, as a matter of fact, a good many of the retailers in some parts of the country have not waited till their shelves and bins were bare before conceding that lower prices were in order. This seems to have been due not to inclination, but under the compulsion exercised by a phenomenon which is described by the statement that "the goods were not moving." When that occurs something must be done, and the only thing effective for the restoration of motion is a lowering of prices, regardless of cost.

That expedient is painful as well as expensive, but the loss involved, especially in the case of foods, is less than would result if the goods continued not to move. Thus, now and then, the consumer gets his revenge, or perhaps it is enough to call it a partial compensation, for the big profits the dealer makes on goods cheaply bought and dearly sold. It's a sort of "wild justice" in the commercial field.

Formalities Cause Hardships. Soldier grievances in regard to delayed or withheld payment by the Government of money due continue to abound, and they are creating a lamentable amount of ill feeling among the men and their relatives. The pity of it is that though everybody at all reasonable knows that the Government intends to pay every cent of this well-earned money, and ultimately will pay every cent of it, neither of these facts looms large in the mind of a boy from home with empty pockets, and he is more than likely to get firmly fixed in his head the conviction that the reason why he doesn't get his money is because of somebody's dishonesty or of somebody else's hardly less criminal negligence.

Presumably, in all these cases, or with exceptions hardly numerous enough to count, the reason is the very different one that the actual payment of the soldiers has been of necessity intrusted to subordinate officials with no power except to carry out iron rules with respect to vouchers and all the other formalities devised to protect the Government from fraud and theft. The purpose of these rules is entirely legitimate, but the effect of their enforcement without any discretionary mitigations or relaxations is often the infliction of more or less cruel hardships on men to whom the country owes not only money; it also owes deepest gratitude.

To establish a happy medium between too much and too little carefulness in paying the soldiers, both before and when they are discharged, is a difficult task. Perhaps the War Department is performing that task as well as is humanly possible, but the men themselves do not believe that, and their incredulity makes them irritable.

A Comparison at Least Convenient. A truly admirable description of the Bolsheviki is the one given by M. PAUL N. MILUKOFF, who was Russian Foreign Minister just after the revolution, when he said that "they are mad dogs who want to bite others so that all may be mad."

Of course, the characterization is not perfect. For one thing, it is unjust to mad dogs, for those poor creatures do not bite because they want to spread the infection of which they are the innocent and helpless victims, but because they are in an agony of fear and pain, and they bite because the primordial impulse to do so has lingered in their darkened minds as the one means of relief or self-protection. From the human standpoint, however, the mad dog must be treated as vicious—as though he knew what he was doing and wanted to involve everybody and everything he meets in his own miserable fate. That explains and justifies the ruthlessness of the measures taken against him.

The Bolsheviki, if not exactly like mad dogs, are exactly like what mad dogs seem to be, and they do really want to make as many others as possible as mad as themselves. They are succeeding, to a degree and after a fashion, and the great men assembled in Paris are seeking a plan for ending the ravages of these savage children of German militarism. It is to be hoped that they find one soon and follow it energetically.

THE LETTS' ARMY.

How It Has Come to be the Main Bolshevist Support.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Lettish troops, press dispatches state, are the backbone of Bolshevist power in Russia.

Who are the Letts and how did they come to be supporters of Trotzky and Lenine?

The Letts are a branch of the Lithuanian race. They inhabit the former Governments of Courland, the southern part of Livonia, (the northern part is inhabited by the Esthonians,) part of Vitebsk, and the vicinity around the City of Dvinsk. They number about 2,000,000 and are mostly Protestants.

Let it be remembered that the German intrigue at the Czar's court and in the Ministries during the war was conducted chiefly through German Barons and the nobility of Lettonia. The Letts knew this and were suspicious of the Russian Government. They welcomed the revolution. It promised them freedom from oppression, and they fought with redoubled energy. Milukoff's fall and the rise of Kerensky did not affect them. They were immune from the disorganization of the Russian armies under Kerensky's régime. Then the factors entered which helped the Bolsheviki to have the Letts side with them. During Kerensky's régime the German armies advanced, and, notwithstanding fearful sacrifices of the Lettish battalions, they took Riga and almost all of Lettonia. The Bolsheviki were quick to grasp the situation, and accused Kerensky of not giving enough support to defend Riga. They also pointed out the fact that Kerensky was too slow in bringing land reforms, from which delay the German Barons profited and retained their hold on the big estates. The Letts were disgusted. A considerable part of them were Socialists by conviction. All these factors helped to bring the Letts on the side of the Bolsheviki.

The Russian armies disintegrated and went homeward. The Letts could not, or if they could they would not, go to their country because it was occupied by the German armies, who were busy creating a Government controlled by the German element. The Letts marched into Russia and kept their organization. During the negotiations at Brest-Litovsk and afterward the Bolsheviki were loudly shouting about the world revolution. They pointed out that Germany was bound to collapse, if not from an internal revolution, which the Bolsheviki were propagating through Socialists, then from the pressure of the allied armies.

The conviction prevailed that eventually something was bound to happen to Germany which would enable the Letts to return to their native soil and wreak vengeance on their oppressors for centuries—the Germans. The Bolsheviki persuaded them that any one who was against the Bolsheviki stood in their own way of returning to their country in a body in order to deal with their oppressors. The Bolsheviki fed them and paid them money. Lenine and Trotzky intrusted them with keeping Bolshevist "order," with organizing the Red army that was to fight the Allies, Czechoslovaks, and Cossacks. When the German collapse was evident, the Letts were again employed in organizing the Red army of the Bolshevist crusaders that was to invade not only Lettonia but all Western Europe.

Because of their nationality and purpose, being in a strange country, the Letts kept their military formation. Nearly all of them read and write, and because of this acquired the leading rôle in Russia, where illiterates number up to 80 per cent. This gave them the feeling of superiority, which was again wisely exploited by Trotzky. The strange behavior of the Letts in foreign Russia is explainable only because they were shut out from the light of the outside world and because they lived in a Russian madhouse created by Trotzky and Lenine.

Efforts at Discord.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Sir Henry Babington Smith is absolutely right in stating that "there are influences and activities, some subtle and some gross, some open and some secret, whose object it is to create discord and destroy the confidence created in the last hundred years between Great Britain and America." The man and the woman who are not alert to detect these poisonous influences, to help to destroy them and to put in their place influences which will make for unity and co-operation, will be roused sooner or later in a fashion as startling to their sense of ease as when they were roused at the beginning of the great world struggle.

Stripping the discussion of the world war of all partisan feelings and sentiment will disclose the basic issue, namely, the struggle between righteousness and evil, no matter how these qualities may personify themselves. Evil in the guise of autocracy, divine right of material kings, &c., has received a death blow. Bolshevism, anarchy, or any movement that stands for physical force and physical domination, whether it expresses itself through the proletariat or the theorist, is a twin brother to autocracy and at this hour is pressing forward in a way that compels all of us to enlist anew in the war of righteousness and to fight until every element that makes for discord, misrule, and mismanagement is utterly destroyed.

Should Great Britain and America agree upon a platform or cement a league, you will have the foundation stone of your future World League toward which we are all looking forward with mingled hopes and prayers.

THE INTERNATIONAL POSITION OF ITALY.

Her Present Views on the Adriatic Question—Willingness to Discuss Difference with the Jugoslavs.

By Captain PIETRO TOZZI and Lieutenant ALBERTO PECORINI, Italian Army, On Special Mission to the United States.

Only three months ago Italy obtained the greatest military victory of the whole world war by defeating, practically alone, the armies of the Austro-Hungarian Empire. Since then public opinion, both in this country and in Italy, seems to have somewhat changed and an anti-Italian propaganda, too often unscrupulously substituting fancies for facts and abuse for argument, has tried to present to the American people an Italy entirely different from the real one. No greater service can be rendered today, not only to America and Italy but also to the cause of peace, than by explaining with the utmost frankness the feelings of the Italian people.

The recent changes in the Italian Government have made it clear to everybody that there has been a change of political orientation in Italy; the fact that Italy may be less ready today to come to a compromise in the settlement of her problems in the Adriatic than she was three months ago has less importance for the American people than the reasons which are behind this change.

First of all, Italy resents the attitude taken by a large section of the press in the allied countries concerning the Adriatic question. The Italian people do not see why there should be such a difference between the treatment accorded to the Germans and that accorded to the Southern Slavs of Slavonia, Croatia, Bosnia, and Herzegovina. The fact that Germany has become a democratic republic has not changed at all the status of the Germans in their relations with France, England, and the United States. All still agree that the Germans are defeated enemies, who must pay morally and materially for all the wrong they have done while they allowed themselves to be led by their Hohenzollern masters. The American soldiers of German birth who fought heroically in the United States Army in France, and the Germans who have fought for France in the so-called Foreign Legion, are worthy of all praise for having accomplished, under trying circumstances, a higher duty toward humanity; but they cannot change the moral and legal status of the Germans of Germany. The wonderful heroism of the Serbians, their great sacrifices for the cause of the Allies, cannot, in the opinion of the Italian people, destroy the fact that the Jugoslavs from Slavonia, Croatia, Bosnia, and Herzegovina furnished to Austria-Hungary the soldiers who fought most bitterly until the end against Italy, and whom Italy has finally defeated. The Allies cannot overlook this fact without hurting very deeply the feelings of the Italian nation.

Some Jugoslavs explain their conduct by saying that they did not follow the example of the Czechoslovaks because, being in direct contact with the Italians, they fought not the Allies but Italy to defend their territory from Italian invasion. This might mean that they prefer Austrian to Italian domination, but there is something much graver than this—which Slav territory were the Jugoslav divisions of the Austro-Hungarian Army defending, when, under the command of the Jugoslav General Boroevic, they fought so bitterly the Italians on the Piave? For what purpose did they emulate the Germans in the inhuman work of destruction in the invaded provinces of Italy? Why did the old men and women of Belluno come out of their ruined houses, after the last victory, to beg the incoming Bersaglieri to give them rifles to avenge their daughters?

Three days before Austria-Hungary surrendered to the Allies, accepting the conditions of the Supreme War Council of Versailles, she had concluded an understanding with the Jugoslavs whereby she recognized the independence of Jugoslavia and turned over to the improvised Jugoslav Government of Zagabria the Austro-Hungarian fleet. The conditions of the armistice included the occupation by allied troops of portions of Austro-Hungarian territory, which Austria had three days before conceded to the new Jugoslavia. Why did the Jugoslavs enter into such an agreement with Austria? Why did they accept the birth certificate of their new nation from the Hapsburgs instead of obtaining it from the Allies as the Czechoslovaks had done?

This is the fundamental misunderstanding. The Italian commanders, representing the Allies, have had to use all their patience to meet so delicate a situation: in Dalmatia Jugoslav Magistrates had to be removed because they would not obey the order that justice be administered in the courts in the name of the allied powers and of the United States. The Italians have fed the Jugoslavs in the occupied region; they have left in peace the Jugoslav officials when they did not meddle with politics or start agitations; not one house has been damaged, not one person has been condemned to death, in spite of innumerable intrigues discovered by the Italian commanding officers; no woman has been insulted; not one pound of merchandise has been requisitioned without proper compensation. This is the answer of Italy to the destruction and to the outrages of the Jugoslav troops that had invaded her territory.

Yet Italy is made to appear by unscrupulous propagandists as an aggressive and imperialistic nation desirous only to supplant Austria in her rôle of oppressor of smaller nations. Great capital is made of the "secret" Treaty of London. In that treaty the plan of military co-operation of Italy with the Allies against Austria-Hungary is outlined. Do the opponents of Italy hold that the Allies should have informed Austria-Hungary, with which they were at war, of their military plans? Do they hold that the Allies should have informed their enemy of what they proposed to do with his territory in case of victory and should have obtained his consent to their plans? Why insist on this "secret" treaty and not on those of England and France? Italy feels hurt when the Jugoslavs say that she compelled the Allies, at the time of their necessity, to give away Jugoslav territory without their being represented in the deal. The Jugoslavs, who were enemies of the Allies and furnishing whole-heartedly to Austria-Hungary her best troops, could not be represented; the Serbians, who were gloriously fighting with the Allies, were well represented by Russia, a signatory to the treaty and the great mother of the Slavs, that had gone to war to save Serbia.

No sensible Italian denies that the great majority of the people in Dalmatia are Jugoslavs and no sensible Jugoslav denies that the history, the civilization, the art and the trade of the Dalmatian coast are Italian. Baedeker, who is not suspected of being tender to Italian interests, will tell the tourist that about one-half of the Slavs of Dalmatia understand Italian, while no Italian speaks Slav. The same can be said of the eastern part of Istria.

There cannot be a fixed rule in determining the political border of a nation; this is usually a compromise between the historical, geographical, ethnic, and even commercial border. The Italians were more than disposed to discuss amicably their problem in the interest of all concerned, but the Jugoslavs have done everything in their power to make such an amicable discussion impossible. Is it too late now? In the interest of both Italians and Jugoslavs it is to be hoped that it is not too late. But on one hand the Jugoslavs must understand their moral and material position and act accordingly; on the other hand the Allies and the United States must convince the Italian nation that the same principles will be honestly applied to all. Italy resents being always told that she must follow a liberal policy in the interest of mankind if the others do not apply to themselves the same principles.

Italy is grateful to the United States, but she feels that if the United States has a vital interest in the disposition of the German islands of the Pacific and in maintaining the Monroe Doctrine, as well as a voice in the foreign relations of the weaker nations of the American continent, she must not be denied a vital determining interest in the eastern Adriatic. Italy loves England, but she feels that if the press in the allied countries repeats so frequently that it would be a crime against the principle of self-determination to give Italy the islands of the Dodecanese, inhabited by Greeks, it ought not to be considered bad taste to mention that Cyprus is also inhabited by Greeks. Italy admires France, but she fails to understand why it should be such a terrible thing to detach a part of Dalmatia from Jugoslavia, while the suggestion of Marshal Foch to detach from Germany the Rhenish provinces does not seem to cause any sensation. The Poles, for commercial necessities, want the German port of Danzig; the Czechoslovaks want to include 3,000,000 Germans in their State; the Jugoslavs themselves plan to include in Jugoslavia over 100,000 Bulgarians and Hungarians, and by the "secret" Treaty of London Italy had assigned to the Jugoslavs the perfectly Italian city of Fiume. This shows that there cannot be a perfect scientific rule in fixing a nation's borders, and that various considerations enter into the process beside self-determination.

Italy feels that she deserves enough political recognition in the world to be treated exactly like the other great nations; after all the blood she has shed and after all the sacrifices she has made, she feels proud to be able to serve humanity as an equal among associates, but her sense of dignity is deeply offended by whosoever fails to understand that the time of her political tutelage has passed forever.

Venezuela and the League.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In forming the League of Nations the fact remains that those countries which held aloof during the mighty struggle of democracy against autocracy by calling themselves neutrals are today relegated to the category of simple spectators, as a deserved punishment for their willful attitude of laissez faire in the midst of a manifest, inevitable conflict between right and wrong, which could have been considerably shortened had they aligned themselves on the side of righteousness the moment the United States entered the fray.

Now the next question will be as to the admission of said neutral nations into the League. There are among them some law-abiding States, like Switzerland, which no doubt will be welcomed as desirable members; but there are others, like my country, Venezuela, where a true republican government has never existed, at least in the sense of a government of, by, and for the people. Through all our history the mere holding of independent political opinions is punished by exile or imprisonment, while the foes of the Government kindle that spirit of revenge which is certain to reappear in the shape of a bloody, fruitless revolution.

Having this in mind I ventured to write a letter to our President, General J. V. Gomez, entreating him to use his influence with the Government in order to secure an amnesty in favor of these assumed political offenders, as I thought that if all the elements of the country could get together and arrange their differences Venezuela would have better chances of being admitted into the league. Up to this date nothing has been done in this regard by the Venezuela Government, and the prospect of a sanguinary contest seems inevitable. Such a desperate step would be regrettable, for all our revolutions have done nothing else but re-establish personal governments, the bravest or most audacious among the military becoming ipso facto the indisputable, uncontrollable leader of the nation possessing unlimited powers.

Therefore, the only hope that remains to the Venezuelan people, as well as to those other peoples similarly situated, lies in a League of Nations so constituted that it will deny us admission unless we amend our perverted political habits.

Printing the Soldier Vote.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I beg to call your attention to what appears an extravagant expenditure in publishing in the county papers throughout the State an elaborate official canvass of votes cast—first, the regular vote, and now the soldier vote. The report of the latter, as just printed in one of the Columbia County newspapers takes approximately four pages of the newspaper to canvass a total of seventy-two votes. Has not the time arrived when such things should stop?

Distrusts Fine Words.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

President Wilson should take notice that more than one can play at the game of phrases! The Tammany men who have just presented a petition to the Mayor say that our brave soldiers have "risked their lives that true democracy might live, not only political democracy,—but in the larger sense a democracy of equal economic and industrial opportunity."

As matter of fact, our brave troops fought for nothing of this sort, and still less did they fight to "make the world safe for democracy." They fought to keep the world, themselves included, from coming under the domination of the ruthless and barbarous Germans, and it is tremendous good fortune for us that the addition of their effort to the four years' splendid work of our Allies has won the day. But is it not time to adopt the habit of speaking the simple truth? We may have a relish for fine phrases when they come from the mouth of our idealistic President, but they are dangerous coin when everybody gets to using them. Direct (and comprehensible) speech is much safer in the long run.

AFTERWARDS.

It was Ho! for the set of the khaki;
Hurrah! for the marching feet;
Three cheers again, as the fighting mas
Went tramping down the street.
Oh, we thrilled as we stood and watched them,
And now they are coming home—
The soldier, out of the trenches,
The sailor, over the foam!

It was Ho! for the glint of a rifle,
And Hey! for the soldier's pack.
With smiles and tears and a burst of cheers—
And now they are coming back!
They have been where the phantoms gather,
Where Death and his cohorts lurk;
They're coming back from the trenches—
Now who will give them work!

Who will cancel his debt to a soldier?
(You have not forgotten that
We cheered and sang till the echoes rang,
At sight of a campaign hat?)
They have battled and bled and suffered;
Now give them a helping hand—
They're coming back from the shadows
And smoke of No Man's Land.

It was Ho! for the boys when they left us;
(They fought through the mud and sleet.)
A tear-filled eye as the flag went by;
(They marched on weary feet.)
We are proud of their shining record,
For they didn't lag or shirk;
They're coming back to the home folks—
Now who will give them work!

LAUD BISHOP GREER IN THE CATHEDRAL

Praise for His 15 Years' Work as Head of Diocese Despite His Request for No Service.

FOR IMMIGRATION CHECK

Dr. Eaton Says Domestic Problems Demand Our Attention Here Now.

Although Bishop David H. Greer had requested that no service should be held in commemoration of his fifteen years as Bishop of the Diocese of New York, his career in that office during this period was the subject of eulogy at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine yesterday by Dean Howard C. Robbins of the cathedral and the Rev. William E. Gardner, Secretary of the General Board of Religious Education of the Protestant Episcopal Church.

"He has shown himself a most American Bishop," said Dr. Robbins, "simple, unaffected, the friend of the people and quite easily approached by them. He has shown himself a devoted Bishop who never spares himself. In fact, if I were to have any quarrel with him it is because he never takes care of himself. During his recent illness, it was all his doctor and nurse could do to keep him from getting out of bed, at the greatest risk to himself, and attending a meeting because he thought it was in the interest of the diocese."

Dr. Gardner said that Bishop Greer had taken the lead in sweeping away conventionalism, which separated the clergy from the members of their congregation and deprived religion of its real force.

"One of his greatest messages," said Dr. Gardner, "was a plea for the destruction of this false conventionalism. The stand taken by Bishop Greer has given thousands the power to think freely on religion. He has always refused to admit the existence of walls and barriers that imagination and the tradition of the ages have been prone to force upon us."

For Check on Immigration.

The Rev. Charles A. Eaton, who preached in the Madison Avenue Baptist Church, asserted that there was danger of losing sight of great internal problems and dangers facing the country while seeking to establish glittering ideals abroad.

"Our American ideals," he said, "are too precious to be frittered away. It is the duty of every citizen to place himself on record against every man and every class of men and every form of propaganda exhibiting un-American ideas and methods. We refused to be stampeded into socialism or Bolshevism, nor are we going to sidestep our domestic problems, so acute and dangerous, by substituting a program of uplift for the other nations of the earth.

"Charity begins at home. There is little doubt that Britain and France are abundantly able to take care of themselves. Let us do the same for America. Let us shut the doors of immigration and keep out the swarming hordes of alien agitators until we have acquired the American soul here."

Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, who spoke on education at the Institutional Synagogue in the Mount Morris Theatre yesterday, said that the United States had years of hard work and achievement ahead and that it was the duty of educational institutions to make their main object that of contributing to the nation's future and to provide a system of education which would allow young men and women to make all the progress that their ambition and ability would permit.

Services for Colonial Dames.

The annual services of the New York Chapter of the Colonial Dames of America were held yesterday in Grace Church, Broadway and Ninth Street. About 270 members were present, and the sermon was preached by the rector, the Rev. Dr. Charles Lewis Slattery.

"You, as representatives of the loyal women of America," said Dr. Slattery, "are gathered in this church this afternoon to thank God for a great victory. Thankful as you rightly are to the courageous soldiers and sailors of our allied nations, your gratitude finds a higher and truer outcome; you are singing with Deborah praises to the ultimate author of victory."

Dr. Slattery in his sermon paid a high tribute to Miss Rose Elizabeth Cleveland, sister of President Cleveland, who sacrificed her life in Italy doing war work among the poor at Bengi di Lucca. He declared that Miss Cleveland was typical of the heroism and self-sacrifice of American womanhood.

REBEL AGAINST CELIBACY.

Copyright, 1919, by The New York Times Company. By Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

GENEVA, Jan. 26.—According to Budapest papers the Catholic clergy of Southern Hungary have addressed a petition to the Hungarian Church Council in which they condemn the rule of celibacy as an antidemocratic institution and demand its abolition.

These priests declare they intend to marry in the future, and demand that all ecclesiastics who were relegated by the church as apostates for having taken wives during the war be readmitted to the priesthood at once.

The petition also advocates the election of bishops by secret vote of the clergy of the diocese, and the appointment of a Hungarian Nuncio at Rome.

CALL PRISON SPECIAL DEMOCRACY LIMITED

Militant Suffragists Will Attack President Wilson on Three-Week Tour of Country.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.—The militant suffragettes represented by the National Woman's Party announced tonight the plans for the dispatch of their "Prison Special" on a tour of the country in an effort to bring pressure to bear on Senators blocking action on the Federal Woman Suffrage Amendment in the Senate.

The militants will call their special "Democracy Limited." It will transport twenty-six women who have served jail sentences here for picketing and will leave Washington on Feb. 9. The militants say their slogan will be "From Prison to People."

In a three-week swing, touching both coasts, the Great Lakes and the Gulf, the special will stop at fifteen cities. Charleston, S. C., will be the first stop. From there the special will go to Jacksonville, Fla.; Knoxville, Tenn.; New Orleans, San Antonio, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Denver, Chicago, Milwaukee, Detroit, Syracuse, Boston, and Hartford, concluding the trip in New York on March 3, the last day of the present Congress. Mass meetings are being arranged for in all of these cities.

Among the women who will travel on the special will be Mrs. John Rogers, Miss Lucy Burns, and Miss Edith Ainge, of New York; Miss Mary Ingham, Mrs. Lawrence Lewis, and Miss Elizabeth McShane, of Philadelphia; Mrs. Abby Scott Baker of Washington, and Mrs. A. R. Colvin of St. Paul. The itinerary has been planned by Mrs. Helena Hill Weed of Hartford, who made out the itinerary of the suffrage special which toured the country two years ago.

"We intend to make it clear to the people," said Mrs. Baker, "that the administration is responsible for the fact that American women are forced to endure imprisonment in their effort to secure the passage of the amendment. The idea prevails that President Wilson has done everything he could for suffrage. But the fact is that, though he spoke for it, he neither preceded nor followed his speech by any effective effort to secure the passage of the amendment; that he has never demanded a party caucus on this measure, as he has on those which he has pushed with vigor; that he has urged the election of men who he knew would vote against suffrage, has failed to denounce the ones who refused to support him on this issue, as he has denounced his opponents on other issues, and that he has permitted the floor leader and spokesman of his party to lead in the Senate the opposition against the enfranchisement of women."

Colonel William B. Thompson has agreed to bear the expense of the literature which will be distributed in large quantities from the special and of which Mrs. Baker, as Publicity Chairman of the trip, will be in charge. Moving pictures showing the demonstrations in front of the White House during the last year will be carried on the car and displayed at meetings.

GENERAL BLISS DECORATED.

Distinguished Service Medal Presented by Pershing in Paris.

PARIS, Jan. 26.—General Tasker H. Bliss, American military representative on the Supreme War Council, was decorated this morning with the Distinguished Service Medal by General John J. Pershing.

The ceremony took place at General Headquarters in the Avenue Montaigne. There were present Brig. Gen. McAndrews, chief of staff; Brig. Gens. Fox and Conner, and many of General Pershing's aids.

Engagements.

Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Hancock of Austin, Texas, announce the engagement of their daughter, Miss Margery Hancock, to Major Stephen Shumway Hanks of the United States Air Service, a son of the late Charles S. Hanks of Boston. Major Hanks was graduated from Harvard in the class of 1912.

Mrs. Gertrude Griffith Jones of Bayonne, N. J., announces the engagement of her daughter, Miss Gertrude Vivian Jones, to Lieutenant Harold Clifton Reed, 22d U. S. Infantry, a son of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Haynes Reed of Beacon, N. Y. Miss Jones is a sister of Griffith Jones, serving in the U. S. Mgr. Dunn Praises Salvation Army.

MINEOLA, L. I., Jan. 26.—In the presence of a nonsectarian gathering of 1,000 war workers, the new $100,000 Salvation Army hotel, huts and hostess house at Camp Mills were dedicated today with appropriate exercises. Third Assistant Secretary of War Frederick P. Keppel was the chief speaker. The Right Rev. Mgr. John J. Dunn, Chancellor of the Roman Catholic archdiocese of New York, said the great work done by the Salvation Army was the result of the "getting together of all denominations," and added: "Out of this war the Salvation Army has become an acknowledged institution."

SHONTS TELLS WHY FARES ARE TOO LOW

Wages Are Up 70 Per Cent. and Materials More Than 100, He Says.

REVENUE BELOW EXPENSES

If the Fare Is Not Raised, He Declares, Overburdened Taxpayers Must Carry the Whole Load.

A recapitulation of the arguments used by the New York Railways Company and the Interborough in support of their applications for increased fares and in opposition to municipal operation is contained in two booklets sent out yesterday and signed by Theodore P. Shonts. One is entitled, "Your Subways; A Statement of the Facts About the Partnership Between the City and the Interborough Rapid Transit Company," and the other is called "Your Street Car Service; A Statement of the Facts About the Situation of the New York Railways Company."

In the railways booklet the case, from the point of view of the company, is thus summed up:

The New York Railways Company is on the verge of a receivership. The company is not overcapitalized. It is economically operated. It has never paid a dividend on its stock.

"Rising costs (due to the war) and fixed rates" tell the story. Wages are up 70 per cent.; materials more than 100 per cent.; taxes are higher. Our entire passenger revenue is not enough to pay for labor, and materials for the service, and taxes.

In about 400 other communities they have increased fares to all the way from 6 to 10 cents. Boston pays 8 cents. We have applied for an 8-cent fare and 3 cents charge for a transfer. For the city not to grant it will:

1. Force bankruptcy.
2. Disrupt service and transfers. (If the leased lines are returned to their owners, each line can charge a 5-cent fare, with no obligation to give free transfers.)
3. Add to the already serious general business situation due to the impaired credit of electric railway securities, which in New York State alone amount to a billion and a quarter dollars.

In opposition to the fare increase it is charged we are paying "excessive rentals" to the owners of the leased lines, (all necessary to a complete system with transfers.)

The charge is not well founded; for the sum total of the net rentals is only 5 per cent. of the present value of these lines. As to municipal operation—it cannot be cheaper; the city admits it would have to increase fares at once. And under municipal operation:

1. Jobs would be held for political reasons instead of efficiency reasons.
2. Political discipline and high accident rate, instead of business discipline and lower accident rate.
3. Change of management after every election.

Bankruptcy of this company would, in short, cost the public far more than added fare

A similar résumé of the subway situation from the Interborough's viewpoint says:

"The City of New York is facing deficits amounting probably from $12,000,000 to $15,000,000 a year on the operation under a 5-cent fare of the dual subway system. Owing to abnormal costs for labor, materials, and supplies, taxes, &c., due to conditions produced by the war, the system is not now earning the preferential payments to be made from operating revenue to the companies. These payments are cumulative, with interest compounded semi-annually. The situation must be met, and the question is: 'Shall it be by higher fares or by additional taxation?'

"It is estimated that from 500,000 to 600,000 suburbanites and strangers from all over the world use the rapid transit lines daily. They use New York's costly conveniences, but do not live in New York or pay taxes in New York.

"If the fare were raised they would add to the city's income and thereby reduce the necessary taxation. If the fare is not raised, the whole load must be put upon the already overburdened taxpayers and rentpayers of New York. Which shall it be?

"That, in brief, is the situation and the question. It is pressing for an answer. Not to increase the fare will postpone any return to the city on its investment of $250,000,000 in the Dual System indefinitely. Meantime it must pay interest on the borrowed money. This means higher taxes, higher rents and prices, reduced city credit, undermining of electric railway security credit, which in New York State alone amounts to $1,250,000,000, faith broken with investors. For without belief in the city's good faith in the terms and spirit of the contracts, private capital could not have been induced to invest in the project. The city had neither funds nor unpledged credit under the debt limit to build the subways.

"The added fare means no profit to the company beyond the terms stated in the contract. To the company it simply means the receipt of preferentials currently (instead of at a later period with compound interest) and an improved credit position.

WIFE FINDS GAMBRILL DEAD.

Despondent Over Illness, Baltimore Society Man Had Shot Himself.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, Md., Jan. 26.—Chauncey Gambrill, prominent in Baltimore society, ended his life this afternoon by shooting himself through the mouth in the bathroom of his home on University Parkway. His act is attributed by his family to despondency over illness. His wife was the only other person in the house at the time. It was not until an hour after the shot had been fired that she discovered the body.

About six weeks ago Mr. Gambrill was taken with a heavy cold, followed by a slight attack of influenza. Until several days ago he remained indoors. This morning he took a short walk, returning about noon. He went to his room about 4 o'clock, and an hour later was fund dead. He had given no outward sign of despondency. But his wife could suggest no other motive for his act.

Mrs. Gambrill is the daughter of the late Gabriel D. Clark of New York and Baltimore, upon whose death she inherited $1,154,000. Mr. Gambrill was a native of New York.

LIEUT. COSTER WEDS.

Naval Attache at The Hague and Miss Henrietta Fox Married at Brussels.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

THE HAGUE, Jan. 25.—The marriage of Lieutenant Norman Coster, United States Naval Attaché at The Hague, to Henrietta Fox took place on Tuesday at the Cathedral of Saint Gudule in Brussels. Brand Whitlock gave the bride away. Henry Sodam of New York was best man. Others present were Burgomaster Max, Marquis Villalobar, Spanish Chargé d'Affaires; M. Van Vollenhoven, Dutch Chargé d'Affaires, and Captain Brocklebank, British Naval Attaché at The Hague, who conducted Mrs. Whitlock to the church.

Lieutenant Coster is a son of Maurice Coster of New York, and the bride comes from Albany, N. Y. Lieutenant and Mrs. Coster returned to The Hague today.

COUNT MINOTTO PAROLED.

Louis Swift's Son-in-Law Released from Internment.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Jan. 26.—Count James Minotto, son-in-law of Louis F. Swift, the packer, who was interned at Fort Oglethorpe as an enemy, has left the stockade in Georgia. He is said to be living in an expensive hotel in Arizona. Exactly where he is the Department of Justice officials at Washington refused to reveal, but they admitted he was not a prisoner, and further, that he was somewhere in the Southwest.

Information concerning Count Minotto's recent release was obtained here today. In reply to questions by The Chicago Tribune correspondent in Washington, Assistant Attorney General John Lord O'Brian admitted Minotto to be out on parole "under heavy bond and under constant surveillance." He was paroled from Ellis Island several days ago, according to Mr. O'Brian.

Minotto was taken from Oglethorpe to New York some time ago to give testimony by deposition in the Caillaux case. Mr. O'Brian intimated that because of the service Minotto rendered to France in this case, and upon the suggestion of France, he was paroled.

NO MEXICAN PEACE ENVOY.

Carranza Government Denies That Pani Has Been Accredited.

Copyright, 1919, by The New York Times Company. Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

MEXICO CITY, Jan. 26.—The Mexican Government has issued an official statement that Señor Pani, the Mexican Minister to France, has not been authorized to represent this country at the Peace Conference, and that it will send no delegates unless neutral countries are invited to the conference.

Neither will it recognize or send Ministers to the Governments of Germany, Austria, and Russia until the internal disturbances of those countries have been settled.

General Amado Aguirre has been named as Minister to Belgium.

DEATH OF J. L. McENTEE.

Veteran of Albany Correspondents Is Victim of Pneumonia.

ALBANY, N. Y., Jan. 26.—Joseph L. McEntee, dean of the New York legislative correspondents, died tonight after a short illness from pneumonia. He was in newspaper work here more than thirty-five years, and for the last twenty-five years had been the Albany correspondent of The New York Sun. He was 54 years old.

Mr. McEntee had once been a telegraph operator, and in the days of sharp competition in getting news from the State capital to New York, whenever there was no operator handy, he was able to put his own story on the wires. He studied law after he became a legislative reporter, and was the friend of many political leaders, from whom he obtained first information of matters such as the Lexow Committee report and the B. R. T. strike investigation.

In Colonel Roosevelt's term as Governor, when the Assembly Clerk "forgot," for political reasons, to read a special message from the Governor urging franchise tax legislation, McEntee got the news of the threat of Roosevelt to go before the Assembly and read his own message if the clerk persisted in refusing.

Nephew, Shot by Ripley, Dies.

Maitland Petri, recently discharged from the army, died yesterday in the Presbyterian Hospital in Newark, N. J., the victim of his uncle, Bertram Ripley, a retired lumber dealer of that city, who killed himself after shooting his wife and Petri on Saturday. Ripley, who had been treated for nervous trouble, is thought to have gone insane at the sight of his nephew's uniform. Though he was 41 years old Ripley had brooded over his inability to get into the army. The wife may recover.

Death of Father Roche.

The Rev. Andrew T. Roche, founder and pastor of the Church of the Holy Family, at New Rochelle, N. Y., died there yesterday of pneumonia. Father Roche was born in New York forty-six years ago and was ordained in St. Patrick's Cathedral, spending ten years in missionary work on the Bowery. He was a cousin of Supreme Court Justice John Ford and Civil Service Commissioner William Drennan.

Miss Ida Waugh, Painter.

Miss Ida Waugh, a painter of portraits and figure pieces, died suddenly Saturday at her home at 245 East Nineteenth Street. Miss Waugh was a student many years ago at the Academie Julien and the Academie Delecluse, in Paris. Her principal painting, "Hagar and Ishmael," now the property of the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts, attracted favorable attention when first shown at the French Salon in 1888. Her father, Samuel Waugh, was a painter of portraits; her mother, Mary Z., painted miniatures, and her brother, Frederick J., was a landscape and marine artist.

Mrs. Curry Dies at 90 Years.

Mrs. Ann J. Curry, 90 years old, mother of John F. Curry, Commissioner of Records, is dead at her home, 140 West Sixty-third Street. Her daughter, Mrs. George H. Childs, is President of the Women's Democratic Club of New York.

Sarah Minturn Sedgwick Dead.

Mrs. Sarah Minturn Sedgwick, wife of Henry Dwight Sedgwick, the author, died yesterday in Boston. Mrs. Sedgwick was the eldest daughter of Mrs. Susanna Shaw Minturn and the late Bowne Minturn of New York.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.—Memorial services for the late Senators Hughes of New Jersey and Broussard of Louisiana were held today in the Senate. In the House services were held for Mr. Broussard and the late Senator Brady of Idaho, both of whom served in the House before their election to the Senate.

KAISER TRIED TO PLACATE ROOSEVELT

Sent Messenger Soon After the War Began to Recall to the Colonel His Visit to Berlin.

GAVE FRIENDLY ASSURANCES

Colonel Replied That He Also Recalled a Pleasant Visit with King and Queen of Belgians.

Hermann Hagedorn, the most recent biographer of Colonel Theodore Roosevelt, said yesterday at memorial services at the Free Synagogue, that in the Summer of 1914, a month after the war had started, the Kaiser sent a special messenger to Colonel Roosevelt with a message in which the Kaiser renewed his professions of friendship and said he recalled with pleasure the visit of Colonel Roosevelt to Berlin. Mr. Hagedorn said that Colonel Roosevelt's reply was:

"Tell his Majesty that I thank him for his expression of good will. Also tell him that I recall with pleasure my visit to Berlin, just as I recall with great pleasure my subsequent visit to the King and the Queen of the Belgians."

One bit of history of Colonel Roosevelt which had never been made public before, Mr. Hagedorn said, was the following entry in the diary of Colonel Roosevelt at the time that he was stricken with jungle fever in Africa:

July 16.—Fever.
July 17.—Fever.
July 18.—Feeling better.
July 19.—Five hippos.

Mr. Hagedorn told of a visit to Colonel Roosevelt in February last, just before Colonel Roosevelt came down with the extremely serious illness which kept him for weeks in a critical condition in Roosevelt Hospital.

"When I got there," said Mr. Hagedorn, "he was pale, suffering great pain, but busily dictating letters to his Secretary. He waved me to a seat and went on dictating letters. Finally, he seemed to have finished and his Secretary advised him not to do any more, but Colonel Roosevelt said:

"'When I was in the White House, I always cleaned up every day. I am going to clean now.'"

He did finish his correspondence. After a short talk, Mr. Hagedorn left, but before he was out of the hotel, he learned that Colonel Roosevelt had fainted a short time after their talk.

"Col. Roosevelt was very accessible," he said. "You could drop in on him at almost any time. He would usually be as busy as a bee answering letters. They were piled up in front of him a foot high from people all over the country. Some were from people who submitted their movie scenarios to him. They were of an endless variety, but they all had to be answered."

Colonel Roosevelt never gave any outward sign of grief after the death of his son Quentin, Mr. Hagedorn said, but this sorrow killed his boyishness of spirit and made a deep difference in him which those who knew him well could detect.

One thousand negro residents of Harlem attended a memorial meeting in honor of Colonel Roosevelt last night in the Salem African Methodist Episcopal Church, 102 West 133d Street. Resolutions praising the life and work of Colonel Roosevelt were unanimously adopted and a copy was ordered to be sent to the Roosevelt family.

Addresses were made by J. Frank Wheaton, ex-Assemblyman E. A. Johnson, David B. Fulton, D. C. Outlaer, Cleveland G. Abbott, and Mrs. M. C. Lawton.

THE FINANCIAL SITUATION

Market Credit Is Freed From Restraint

With credit restrictions on stock market loans finally removed altogether, speculators in stocks are supplied with means to carry out their operations on the constructive side of prices with greater freedom than they have enjoyed for six months or more. The next phase in the situation is to discover whether incentives other than those supplied by enlarged bank credits are in existence to promote a forward movement. The Stock Exchange authorities, in urging last week that the Money Committee let down the bars, believed that the influences for a marked increase of speculation were not present, and it is to be supposed that they arrived at this decision after careful study of the factors which promote the buying of stocks. Theoretically, brokerage loans may be expanded as rapidly as buyers of stocks seek credit to extend their purchases. Actually, the removal of loan limitations is accompanied by the tacit understanding that bankers and Stock Exchange leaders will continue to exercise at least a casual supervision of trading and at any time may take measures to check speculation if it should give promise of expanding too rapidly. An estimate frequently heard in the Street during the last fortnight was that market loans, used for carrying stocks, amounted to about $400,000,000, and at this level showed a considerable decline from the aggregate of September 16 last, owing to the substantial liquidation which has been completed since that date. If this decline actually has occurred, and providing also that a $500,000,000 or $600,000,000 loan account would not be onerous for the banks with Government and commercial financing to be considered, it might be assumed that a considerable increase in market activity on a rising price scale would be permitted before a check was again placed on credit expansion. The whole situation appears to revolve about the desire, or non-desire, of the public to buy stocks. Underlying industrial conditions can hardly be said to favor a growth of speculative purchases of any great extent. The steel trade, which supplies a basis for estimating general business activity, is still passing through the period of contraction which followed the cessation of war manufacturing. Many of the smaller companies are said to be working at less than 60 per cent. of capacity, and while the largest unit is still extensively engaged on accumulated orders, the tendency here is toward a gradual letdown in mill work. The sharp decline which occurred in the cotton market last week reflected much uncertainty among textile manufacturers, both at home and abroad, in regard to the demand for finished goods during the greater part of the year. While price readjustments downward have made considerable progress the feeling is evident in many financial quarters that the movement will have to go further before buyers and sellers find a common ground for doing business. And over all, perhaps, as far as securities are concerned, are the preparations already being made for the successful flotation of the Victory Loan in April. A general survey of business and trade certainly appears to uphold the belief of Stock Exchange officials that the stock market will not make undue demands on the banks for some time to come. It is safe to say that all interests concerned with security prices, except those who are committed marketwise to lower levels, hope that the changed money situation may work to keep quotations stable and perhaps bring about a gradual advance. A forward movement of moderate dimensions would not react adversely on bank credits and quite possibly would have a beneficial effect on the distribution of the forthcoming loan. It would also enable corporations with financing to do to float new securities more easily and at the same time a rise of stocks would play a part in encouraging an expansion of commercial operations in many lines.

A noticeable change came over the investment market last week, due to the preparations for the Government's loan. Bankers let enough of their opinions become public to show they realize a need for special features to give the great offering a wide public appeal. This was best displayed in the remarks by Gates W. McGarrah of the Liberty Loan Committee before members of the American Institute of Banking to the effect that investment considerations must have a prominent place alongside patriotism to make the offering a success. In bond circles it was noted as the week progressed that the demand for many established corporation and municipal issues was tapering off, and the impression spread abroad that little if any new financing on a large scale could be put through before the Victory Loan campaign opened. It is a little early yet to determine the particular factors which will make the Government offering stronger in appeal than previous issues. The suggestion that it be not more than five years in maturity, that it contain special income tax exemption features, and that it provide for the conversion of part of the Liberty Loans has been discussed among bankers who expect to be intimately connected with the distribution. The possibility of making the new bonds available for payments of a certain percentage of income taxes in the future has also been talked over. Many bankers fear that the impression may grow stronger that the banks rather than the public will be expected to subscribe for the loan, and because of this feeling in banking circles it is likely that every effort will be made to shape the offering so that it will appeal to investors as a profitable issue.

The needs of the railroads for funds in the current year continue to expand as preparations are made to increase their facilities and improve their physical condition. It had been known for some time that the revolving fund of $500,000,000 at the command of the Railroad Administration was nearly exhausted, but the estimate by Mr. Hines that $750,000,000 would be necessary as an additional reservoir for 1919 came as something of a surprise last week. A survey of complete railroad results in the last year indicates that wage increases, if they had been in force for the full twelve months, would have added nearly $800,000,000 to operating costs. As it was, the increase of expenses from this source was well over $625,000,000, and the subject supplies considerable interest in reference to the current year because of the unknown state of traffic now that there is little war freight to be carried. In regard to the railroad future the hearings before the Senate Committee have done something to give the public a view of the practical problems involved. Chairman Kruttschnitt of the Southern Pacific voiced opinions before the Senators last week which indicated a desire among railroad managers to assist the less prosperous carriers in the matter of income through the pooling system. He would have traffic so distributed where it was possible that earnings would be equalized to a great extent, and this emphasized one of the points raised by the Association of Railway Executives in their plan for returning the railroads to their owners. Comment from Washington indicates that Congress is likely to work on a composite program, taking particular features of several plans for handling the roads. It is to be expected that this will necessitate prolonged hearings and deliberations over the railroad question.

APPEALS TO SAVINGS BANKS.

Secretary Glass Asks Them to Encourage Thrift Among the People.

At a meeting of the Executive Committee of the Savings Bank Section of the American Bankers' Association held in this city Saturday night, a telegram from Secretary of the Treasury Carter Glass was submitted to the Committee by Pierre Jay, Federal Reserve Agent of the Second Federal Reserve District. Secretary Glass's message read:

Please extend to the members of the savings bank section of the American Bankers' Association at their meeting Jan. 25, the appreciation of the Treasury Department for the assistance which they have rendered the Government during Liberty Loans and War Savings campaigns, and say that the Treasury Department will welcome the continuance of their active co-operation in campaigns of the same nature during 1919. Obligations incurred by the Government in order to win the war at the earliest possible date and which undoubtedly helped to terminate the war much sooner than might otherwise have been the case, must be liquidated. This can be accomplished only by levy of taxes and by the savings of the people converted into investments in Government obligations issued for that purpose. Savings banks, as a whole, have not suffered loss of deposits as a result of war financing. On the contrary gains have been recorded, and I am informed that deposits in savings banks are now rapidly increasing. I am confident that the savings banks of the country will patriotically assist in the great task of helping to liquidate the war bills of our Government and of encouraging the habit of thrift amongst the people which, in turn, should reflect itself in larger deposits and consequently increased prosperity for savings institutions.

The Savings Bank Section replied to the Secretary by the unanimous adoption of resolutions in which it was stated that the practice of "consistent saving" had greatly increased as a result of the various Liberty Loan campaigns. The Section also pledged itself to aid in every way possible the Treasury Department in its "nationwide effort to induce greater thrift through the sale of savings stamps and otherwise."

WANTS CUT IN OCEAN RATES.

Export Association's President Sees Need of Stimulating Commerce.

George E. Smith, President of the American Manufacturers' Export Association, in summing up yesterday the result of information derived from questionaires, said that the only way to insure the growth of American commerce abroad under normal conditions would be for this country to establish reasonable ocean freight rates. Recommendations to this effect would be made to Government authorities, he said, on the ground that his association was convinced that only goods which met no substantial competition in foreign markets could be sold after present carrying charges were added to them.

Mr. Smith asserted that it cost $25 to ship a ton of staples from New York to Buenos Aires and $15 to ship it from Liverpool, and that if the Government would establish cheap ocean freight rates, even at a loss, the volume of export trade soon would compel favorable trade routes and cheap freight without Government assistance. He urged that the merchant ships now at the Government's command be devoted to this service.

Bayonne County Tax Rate Cut.

There was much rejoicing yesterday among Bayonne property owners when they learned that upon the application of William F. Higgins, who alleged the county rate was exorbitant, Supreme Court Justice Francis J. Swayze had reduced the Bayonne County tax rate from $5.64 per $1,000 valuation to $2.81. Persons who have paid their taxes will receive a rebate to conform with the reduced rate.

Trade Envoy to Italy.

H. C. MacLean, New York district manager of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, has been selected by the department to represent the United States in Italy as Special Trade Commissioner. Mr. MacLean expects to sail within a month for his new post. He will make a survey of industrial conditions in Italy.

CALL FOR COMMENTS ON MAIL SERVICE

Merchants' Association Urges Its Members to Send Their Complaints to Washington.

CITES FOREIGN DELAYS

Cable Service Also Assailed in Letter of Protest to Chief Naval Censor.

In an appeal issued yesterday the Merchants' Association invited its members to accept the suggestion made by First Assistant Postmaster General Koons and write to Washington, telling frankly what business men think of the mails under the direction of Mr. Burleson. At the same time the association disclosed that it had protested to Secretary Baker against the irregularity of soldiers' mails. Mr. Koons's letter of inquiry was as follows:

The Post Office Department desires to maintain the postal service at a high standard of efficiency and make it meet the necessities and requirements of the public. Notwithstanding the extraordinary conditions prevailing during the war, the department has attempted to do what no other country at war has undertaken, namely, to conduct the postal service without curtailment or restriction of facilities or conveniences to the public and at the same time perform the numerous additional duties and war activities imposed upon it. I am not aware of any way in which we can get in as close touch with postal needs as through the business organizations and representative business men of the country.

With this end in view, I am requesting that you advise me promptly whether your postal service is satisfactory and meets the necessities of the business interests; if not, what are the existing defects wherein the service should be remedied and improved?

In passing this request on to its members the Merchants' Association advised them to take advantage of the opportunity. It also announced that it had received hundreds of letters making complaints against the efficiency of the postal service and announcing the loss of valuable packages in the mails.

The representations made by the association against continued delay of transoceanic mails were set forth in a communication from S. C. Mead, Secretary, to Mr. Baker personally. After telling of numerous instances where letters had been held up through the irregularity of the sailing schedules, Mr. Mead said "it is our understanding that the sailing schedules of these steamships are under the control of the Secretary of War." Continuing, the letter said:

The serious matter of delays in transoceanic mails has been repeatedly brought to our attention by business houses in New York. The statement is made that the delays are in part due to the censorship which is necessarily exercised over incoming and outgoing mail. It is also stated that the delays are accentuated because the mail is often intrusted to slow boats because no more speedy boats are available. A recent press dispatch stated that English mail had just left New York on a vessel which would be fourteen days en route to England.

Another subject of objection by the association is the censorship on cables. A letter was sent yesterday to the Chief Cable Censor, Navy Department, which was in part as follows:

Members of the Merchants' Association of New York continually make statements to us with regard to the very serious inconveniences and losses which they are experiencing because of delays in the transmission and delivery of business cable messages. In this connection we desire to quote from a letter which has come to us from an important business firm with regard to the cable situation in connection with South African service, as follows:

The delay in cables is putting importers in this country of South African commodities to enormous expense both in the charges for duplication of cables, misinterpretation occasioned by delays and in the loss of benefits of markets which necessarily follow delays and acceptances of offers. In normal times we could exchange cables with Cape Town in forty-eight hours. For the last two and a half months the smallest average time, to our knowledge, for the transmission of cables from New York to Cape Town and transmission back to New York of a prompt reply is fifteen days. In many instances this has taken longer than forty days. There should be no reason for this extraordinary delay. The facilities for transmission are just as good as in normal times and the burden of cable exchanges is less if anything.

May we ask that you give the statements above made your most careful consideration? In connection with the expeditious delivery of cable messages, the Merchants' Association desires to renew its suggestion that in light of the fact that the armistice has been signed and active hostilities ceased and also in light of the fact that the formal conclusion of peace may be indefinitely delayed, the authorities in charge of the censoring of cables seriously consider the possibility of immediately allowing a much more general use of codes than has been true in the past. Business interests are suffering enormously from the disrupted conditions of cable service, only part of which is due to the regulations of the Censors. It is true, and any relief that can properly be extended will be cordially appreciated.

Copies of the letter were sent to the Bureau of Censorship and to the Foreign Trade Adviser of the Department of State.

Preparing for Business Under New Conditions

INFORMATION is vital to the American business man at this stage of the world's affairs. He must keep in touch with the progress of readjustment from a war to a peace basis. He must know what means are available to him for carrying on and enlarging his business activities under the new conditions.

This Company has endeavored to meet these needs through its publications on various phases of commercial and industrial problems. Among these publications are the following:

"The Coming Industrial Expansion"
A study of factors that will play a dominant part in the industrial life of the era now beginning.

"Combinations under the Webb Law"
The advantages of coöperation in the export field, with typical examples of how the law may be applied.

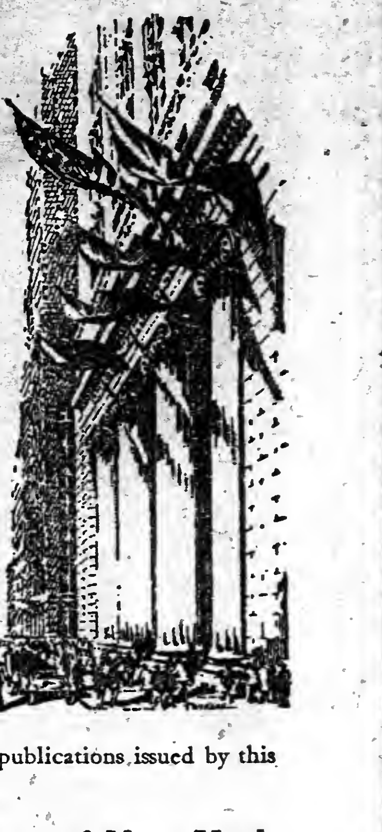
"Taking Stock of the Future"
A study of the preparations made by other countries for after-the-war trade.

"Acceptances"
Bank and trade acceptances, their purpose, use and development as credit instruments and as circulating mediums of finance.

"Credits Through Acceptances"
The financial and economic possibilities of acceptances and their relation to the extension of foreign trade.

"Acceptances in Retail Business"
The possibilities of these instruments in practically all lines.

"Banking Service for Foreign Trade"
Facilities offered by this Company to exporters, importers, and banking institutions.



These booklets and a full list of the publications issued by this Company may be had on request.

Secretary Glass Warns That It Is Unlawful to Traffic in the Securities.

POSTMASTERS ON GUARD

Dockery Notifies Them That Certificates Are Not to be Cashed Except for Original Owners.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.—Formal warning was issued by Carter Glass, Secretary of the Treasury, and by A. M. Dockery, the Third Assistant Postmaster General, tonight against what they characterize as offers by "unscrupulous persons through advertisements and in other ways to buy War Savings Certificate stamps."

Both officials make it plain that, under the law, War Savings Stamps are payable only to the original owners of the stamps, and Judge Dockery, after quoting from the statement which Mr. Glass issued tonight, promulgated an order to Postmasters directing them not to pay money on War Savings Stamps on which the names of the owners have not been entered or on which the names have been changed.

Secretary Glass's notification to all persons to refrain from offers to buy War Savings Stamps or accept them in trade follows:

"My attention has been directed to the numerous offers made by unscrupulous persons through advertisements and in other ways to buy War Savings Certificate Stamps, and as a result of such offers I am informed that owners of such securities have suffered material losses which could have been avoided by redemption of the War Savings Certificate Stamps at Post Offices, as provided by law.

Quotes Terms of the Law.

"I therefore direct the attention of the public, particularly such persons as have made offers of the character above mentioned, to the following terms and conditions which are printed on the back of the War Savings Certificate of the series of 1918:

"'This certificate is of no value except to the owner named hereon, and is not transferable.

"'The law provides that no one person shall at any one time hold War Savings Certificates to an aggregate amount exceeding one thousand dollars.

"'Certificate—This certifies that subject to the terms and conditions printed hereon, the owner named on the back hereof will be entitled to receive on Jan. 1, 1923, in respect of each United States War Savings Certificate Stamp of the series of 1918, then affixed hereto, the amount indicated thereon as then payable, or, at his option, will be entitled to receive at any earlier date, in respect of each such stamp then affixed hereto the lesser amount indicated in the table printed hereon.'

"Treasury Department Circular 128, issued Dec. 18, 1918, and referring to War Savings Certificate Stamps, series of 1919, contains among others the following provisions:

"'Any owner of a war savings certificate, series of 1919, at his option, will be entitled to receive, at any time after Jan. 10, 1919, and prior to Jan. 1, 1924, at a money order Post Office, the office where registered in the case of a registered certificate, upon surrender of his certificate, and upon compliance with all other provisions thereof, in respect of each war savings certificate stamp, series of 1919, then affixed to such certificate the amount indicated in the following table, but no Post Office shall make any such payment until ten days after receiving written demand therefor, and such certificate must be surrendered for payment within sixty days after such demand, otherwise the demand will be deemed to be waived and a new demand will be required before payment.

"'War Savings Certificate Stamps, series of 1919, are not transferable and will be payable only to the respective owners named thereon, except in the case of the death or disability of any such owner.

"'It shall not be lawful for any one person at any time to hold War Savings Certificates of any one series to an aggregate amount exceeding $1,000 (maturity value.)'

"In order that the interests of owners of War Savings Certificates Stamps of either series may be safeguarded, I hereby notify all persons to refrain from offers to buy war savings stamps or accept same in trade.

"The Post Office Department, co-operating with the Treasury Department, has issued instructions whereby payment will be refused whenever it is apparent that changes have been made in the name of the original owner of any certificates which may be presented to Post Offices for redemption.

"I earnestly request newspapers and magazines to give this matter the fullest amount of publicity in order that the rights of millions of people—investors in United States Government securities—may be fully protected."

Postmasters Warned.

Judge Dockery's instructions to the Postmasters, after quoting from Mr. Glass's statement, follow:

"In pursuance of the foregoing, Postmasters are directed not to pay war savings certificates on which the names of the owners have not been entered or have been erased or changed, since, under the regulations, they are not transferable, and are payable only to the original owners, except in case of death or disability.

"Postmasters are further instructed not to pay any war savings certificates presented by persons or firms known to be buying, or publicly offering to buy, war savings stamps or certificates from the owners unless positive evidence is submitted that the certificates were originally issued to the persons or firms presenting them for payment.

"When consulted by owners of war savings stamps in regard to offers to purchase such stamps at less than current value, postmasters should invite their attention to the fact that war savings certificates may be cashed at money order post offices after ten days' written notice, and that this is a privilege accorded by law. At the same time it should be pointed out that the need of the Government for the proceeds of the war savings stamp issue is great and the holders should be urged to retain their stamps until maturity as a patriotic act unless their necessities are urgent."

W. S. S. PRICE IS GOING UP.

Holders of 1918 Stamps May Exchange Them for 1919 Issue.

The War Savings Committee has issued a pamphlet, which is being distributed to the 53,000 authorized War Stamp sales agents in the Second Federal Reserve District, a summary of which states:

"Thrift stamps purchased during 1918 can be exchanged for 1919 War Savings Stamps and additional thrift stamps of the same style are on sale this year. Thrift cards similar to those issued last year are now distributed, and sixteen stamps affixed to these, plus 12 cents, are exchangeable for a War Savings Stamp during the rest of this month. In February the cost of a W. S. S. will be advanced 1 cent, and in each succeeding month of the year the advance will be 1 cent.

"The sale of 1918 War Savings Stamps was discontinued on Dec. 31, 1918, agents having unsold stamps of that issue being empowered to exchange them at the Federal Reserve Bank for the 1919 stamps. Purchasers of 1918 War Savings Stamps do not need to exchange them for 1919 stamps. They are good in themselves for $5 on Jan. 1, 1923, one year ahead of the time the 1919 stamps mature. Purchasers are advised to hold their 1918 W. S. S. and not to cash them."

DEPRECATES TAX UPHEAVAL.

Slight Changes Will Meet $10,600,000 Deficit, Travis Says.

ALBANY, N. Y., Jan. 26.—No radical changes in the State's tax laws are necessary this year, State Comptroller Eugene M. Travis announced tonight. In this position he apparently differs from Chairmen Davenport and Judson of the legislative taxation committees, who last week forecast a deficit this year of $12,000,000, and intimated that a State income tax was a possibility of the near future. Comptroller Travis predicts that the deficit will be only $10,600,000, due to estimated loss in excise revenue, and that slight changes in existing statutes will raise this amount.

"If these few alternations, which I hope to submit shortly to the Legislature, are adopted," he said, "business conditions, now facing serious readjustment, will not be required to meet any further changes. As shown in my last report, the State's available resources will amount to $57,000,000. Should the Legislature decide again to levy a direct tax similar to last year's, exclusively for sinking fund purposes, it will not approximately $13,300,000. If the budget requests, now aggregating $96,000,000, can be reduced to $81,500,000—last year's total—only $10,600,000 additional revenue will be needed."

To Repatriate 1,000,000 Russians.

PARIS, Jan. 26.—The Red Cross Mission sent by the International Red Cross at Geneva has arrived in Cracow to take care of Russian war prisoners still in Poland. Arrangements are being made to repatriate 1,000,000 Russian war prisoners.

Fields for Investment

NEVER will the United States become the Financial Center of the World so long as its citizens are willing to place their money in local business only.

England's position will be secure just so long as her surplus funds go to finance legitimate foreign business. She placed her loans throughout the world and thus financed her trade.

On account of her physical position England has been forced to look afield for investments, and owing to her physical position she always will.

The United States, on the other hand, up to the present has always found attractive opportunities for investment comparatively close to the investor's business interests.

As opportunities for such profitable investments become fewer, the American will do well to extend his business horizon and consider investments of other localities.

Advertising As an Investment

THE manufacturer who looks upon advertising as an expense has an inverted focus.

Advertising is an investment that yields a return in proportion to the skill with which it is planned and executed. If you have never thought of it in this light and would like confirmation, ask any great national advertiser what valuation he puts on his trade-mark and how much his advertising has returned in dividends.

Our business is to make advertising pay. That we know how is best evidenced by the success of Federal clients.

When you want advertising that will pay a dividend and constantly multiply the principal value of your business—

New York, January 14, 1919. By H. F. BAETZ, Treasurer.

Referring to the above notice of the Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Company, the undersigned offer to holders of the Six Per Cent. One-Year Gold Notes of said Company, due February 1, 1919, the privilege of exchanging the same for a like face amount of new Six Per Cent. One-Year Gold Notes of said Company, due February 1, 1920.

Holders desiring to accept the offer of exchange should surrender their Notes promptly at the office of the undersigned, who will issue a Temporary Receipt, entitling the holder to receive the new Notes, when issued and received by them. The coupon for interest, due February 1, 1919, should be detached and collected in the usual manner.

For full particulars as to the new issue of Notes, and as to the financial position of the Company, reference is made to a letter from Guy E. Tripp, Esq., Chairman of the Board of the Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Company, copies of which may be obtained from the undersigned.

This offer is subject to withdrawal without notice.

HAVE YOU AN IDLE PLANT? OR Any Product Needing Development?

The highly efficient organization of Engineers and Production men which we established at the beginning of the war (and which gave its entire time to war work) is being retained intact.

It will be maintained for the purpose of giving to manufacturers an engineering service, including the designing, perfecting and making ready for production, all classes of engineering work.

They have at their disposal one of the most completely equipped engineering Laboratories, where development work is carried on under the constant and watchful supervision of these men, who are authorities in their fields.

OPEN TRADE WITH SWISS.

Licenses Freely Granted for Many Commodities Now.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.—Switzerland's lack of typewriters and duplicating machines, one of the penalties imposed upon her by commercial stringencies of war time, will soon be satisfied.

A new list of commodities for which export license to Switzerland will be freely granted was today announced by the War Trade Board. In addition to those machines other items on this new free list for Switzerland are photographic goods, (not including chemicals,) and many essential drugs, commodities which Switzerland has been in special need of.

Export licenses for shipments small in valuation of all commodities including foodstuffs, will also be freely granted, it was stated.

Personal effects, household goods, and other articles the shipment of which is not a part of any commercial transaction will also be licensed freely for export.

Moreover, shippers in this country will find their procedure greatly simplified by the fact that it is no longer necessary to consign shipments of commodities on this new free list to the Societe Suisse de Surveillance.

LABOR COSTS SOLE BAR TO BUILDING

Contractors, Refusing to Compete, Say Owners Complain of New Wage Scales.

EVEN GOVERNMENT BALKS

Peace-Time Construction Program on Post Offices Stops as Appropriations Wither.

While the United States Government is urging a general resumption of building construction to absorb the incoming fighters its own peace-time construction program has been brought to a standstill by the high cost of labor.

In New York and vicinity, with weather conditions during the entire Winter ideal for continuous construction work, contract awards are at present barely 10 per cent. of what they were in the year 1912, and most of these are on building operations of a specialized type like necessary commercial or industrial construction or institutional building.

During the month of January the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department has advertised for and received bids for the construction of forty Post Office buildings throughout the country. In every case the lowest bids have run from 10 to 80 per cent. over the amount available for the work, and the largest item in this excess construction cost is labor.

The appropriations for these buildings were, of course, made before the war. It is therefore impossible for the Treasury Department to award contracts at this time without immediate relief from Congress in the form of additional appropriations.

To meet this emergency the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds has now under consideration the facts as submitted by the Secretary of the Treasury, recommending that the additional appropriations necessary to carry on the work be made as soon as possible, but the prospects are not good for barely a fair percentage of these building operations to proceed if present costs of labor and other items prevail above the 1918 schedules.

Contractors who have estimated on these public improvements as well as thousands of privately operated building projects say that in making their estimates they have had to figure in wage scales of from 10 to 30 per cent. above those operative last year. When the owners received these figures they rejected them except in cases where the most urgent construction was demanded regardless of cost with the complaint that they could not figure a profit on their projects if costs advanced any higher.

In nearly every line of building materials reductions have been made, to meet the owner half way according to the Dow Service Daily Building Report. The same applies to practically all of the building equipment lines, but still there is nothing like the volume of construction moving to award of contract for spring construction that is represented by projects reported as being ready to proceed if the price can be made right.

In the week just closed there were in the metropolitan district of New York 207 building operations reported for figures and only thirty-five contracts were awarded. Practically the entire remainder were withdrawn because of excessive cost, largely represented by wages, or were indefinitely deferred.

For the first time in as many years as can be remembered building contractors are refusing to compete on jobs in the face of a potential building construction movement that is limitless as to size. The owners, on the other hand, say that there is no way in which they can go ahead with building construction plans, if construction costs are such as to make it necessary to further inflate rents.

This Spring will probably witness the peak of the high rent era if construction costs can be reduced so as to permit building construction to proceed, thereby relieving the dearth of dwellings, commercial and industrial space that make it possible for rents to be high. Even in the most unfavored sections of Manhattan, rents of all kinds are being arbitrarily advanced because of the certainty that the underconstructed market does not afford tenants opportunity to move to other quarters with profit.

The artisan who complains of high cost of living, therefore, cannot hope to effect a change in the conditions he complains of until he provides the way for increasing the supply of rentable space.

Careful computation of current construction work contemplated and that which is likely to proceed between now and the opening of the building season puts the total at only a little above 20 per cent. of normal, accepting 1912 as a normal year.

This volume will be principally that of old buildings that are being bought up rapidly and are being remodeled at comparatively small cost to reap the benefit of the era of high rents, not only in New York but in the suburbs.

On the other hand, if the labor market can be stabilized so that the 1918 wage scales can be figured on for the immediate future, there will be such a demand for new construction as to strain the capacity of building material manufacturers to meet it.

PLAN FOR ROOSEVELT PARK.

William Loeb Would Have Memorial the Gift of the Whole Country.

The Roosevelt Memorial Park in Oyster Bay will be one of the most beautiful in this part of the country it is expected. Scores of landscape artists have offered their services to William Loeb, President of the Memorial Committee. The site of the park is near the railroad station, fronting the bay, and comprises about eighteen acres. Mr. Loeb and John F. Bermingham, Vice President of the organization have decided to make the purchase of the park a national movement. Hundreds of letters have been received promising contributions.

Mr. Loeb said yesterday that he would undoubtedly ask some prominent man in each State to act as Treasurer to receive funds from the State. In many States the Republican organizations have offered their assistance in raising contributions. Letters containing small amounts of money have ben received already from persons who are giving their mite for a memorial of "America's greatest man." The proposed park was greatly favored by Colonel Roosevelt. The park as planned will have an athletic field, stadium, and bathing beach.

The People's Social Service League, 271 East Seventh Street, at a memorial meeting held yesterday afternoon, unanimously adopted a plan which proposes that a suitable statue of Colonel Roosevelt be erected on Ellis Island near the Statue of Liberty, as a mark of appreciation of the league, which represents all organizations of the east side, for the man who opposed stringent emigration laws. It was decided that appeals be sent to all emigrant organizations for funds to erect such a statue.

TELLS OF JAIL LIFE.

Evan Thomas Makes a Plea for Conscientious Objectors.

Charging that the military prisons in the United States constitute moral menace and that the punishment known as solitary confinement is particularly bad in its effect on the prisoners, Evan Thomas, one of the conscientious objectors recently released from the Federal Military Prison at Fort Leavenworth, Kan., told the members of the National Civil Liberties Association at a meeting in the McAlpin yesterday afternoon that he could never have believed some of the things he saw at the prison had he not been there. He supplemented his talk with a plea for the release of some 200 conscientious objectors still in the prison. Unanimous resolutions were passed asking Secretary of War Baker to free the men.

The speaker found no fault with the prison itself, declaring that it was a model of cleanliness, nor with the officials at Fort Leavenworth, who, he said, were the product of ideas originating at West Point. The word order was paramount with them, he said, and they were determined to brook no interference.

"It is the system under which Leavenworth and other military prisons are conducted that I criticise," he said. "It is impossible for a man to emerge from them a better man."

To Fight Bolshevism Here.

The Independent Order Free Sons of Israel announced yesterday the inauguration of a campaign against bolshevism which will include agitation for legislation, to eliminate immigration of persons whose devotion to American ideals and institutions is doubtful. Starting in Free Sons Hall, 21 West 124th Street, on Feb. 3 next, the Order will hold a series of eight lectures to educate the public on the subject. It also plans mass meetings under the auspices of its eighty subordinate lodges throughout the country.

THE WEATHER

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.—The storm that was over the northeast portion of the Gulf of Mexico Saturday night moved rapidly northeastward and has disappeared over the Atlantic Ocean. During the last twenty-four hours it was attended by general rains in the East Gulf and South Atlantic States and on the Middle Atlantic Coast.

Relatively high pressure now prevails over practically all parts of the country. The prolonged period of warm weather continues over practically all parts of the United States, the excess in temperature being pronounced over all Northern States east of the Rocky Mountains.

The outlook is for fair weather and mild temperature over the States east of the Mississippi during Monday and Tuesday.

FORECAST TODAY AND TUESDAY.

Eastern New York and New England—Fair Monday and Tuesday; moderate temperature.

The temperature record for the twenty-four hours ended at 11 P. M., taken from the thermometer at the local office of the United States Weather Bureau, is as follows:

3 A. M.	36	39	4 P. M.	23	50
6 A. M.	20	35	6 P. M.	21	48
9 A. M.	26	37	9 P. M.	23	42
12 M.	24	39	11 P. M.	20	41

This thermometer is 414 feet above the street level. The average temperature yesterday was 44; for the corresponding date last year it was 23; average on the corresponding date for the last thirty-three years, 30. The temperature at 8 A. M. yesterday was 39; at 8 P. M. it was 43. Maximum temperature, 51 degrees at 3:30 P. M.; minimum, 36 degrees at 8:30 A. M. Humidity, 71 per cent. at 8 A. M.; 67 per cent. at 8 P. M.

The barometer at 8 A. M. yesterday registered 29.77 inches; at 8 P. M. it stood at 29.80 inches.

BANKRUPTCY NOTICES.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT, FOR the Southern District of New York.—In the matter of AMERICAN MANUFACTURERS' SALES CO., INC., Alleged Bankrupt.—No. 26529.

It appearing to my satisfaction from the petition of Edward P. Sobel, verified the 22nd day of January, 1919, that a petition was filed in this court on the 17th day of January, 1919, praying that the above named, AMERICAN MANUFACTURERS' SALES CO., INC., be adjudged a Bankrupt and that a subpoena directed to the said alleged Bankrupt was duly issued out of this Court to the Marshal of this District and that the said Marshal has been unable to serve the same upon the alleged Bankrupt and that said alleged Bankrupt is not within this District now, nor are any of its officers now within this District so that personal service may be made upon it, and that diligent efforts have since been made to ascertain the whereabouts of the said alleged Bankrupt and that it is not now within the jurisdiction of this Court; it is now, on motion of Edward P. Sobel, attorney for the petitioning creditors,

Ordered, that the above named alleged Bankrupt plead or answer on or before the 10th day of February, 1919, to the petition herein filed in the office of the Clerk of this Court on the 17th day of January, 1919, and in case of its failure to plead or answer thereto, adjudication shall be made against it according to the prayer of said petition; and it is further Ordered, that this Order be published in The New York Times once a week for two successive weeks, said publication to commence not later than the 24th day of January, 1919, and that a copy of this Order be mailed to the said alleged Bankrupt at its last known place of business, to wit: No. 250 West 69th Street, in the City of New York, on or before the day of the first publication, and that another copy of this Order be mailed to Thomas H. Keogh, at No. 52 Broadway, in the City of New York, on or before the day of the first publication.

Dated, New York, January 22nd, 1919.

Notice is hereby given that pursuant to the provisions of the Final Decree entered on October 8, 1918, in the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of Ohio, Western Division, in a Cause in Equity No. 116, wherein The New York Trust Company and another are plaintiffs and The Cincinnati, Findlay and Fort Wayne Railway Company and others are defendants, all holders of claims for unpaid debts, claims and charges, whether against the Receiver of said Railway Company or otherwise arising, and claiming priority over the lien of the First Mortgage of said Railway Company dated November 1, 1893, and the supplements thereto, are required forthwith to file with the undersigned as Master Commissioner, itemized and verified proofs in writing of such claims, and any such claims which shall not be so filed prior to May 1, 1919, shall not be paid out of the proceeds of sale nor if enforceable, be enforceable against the property described in said First Mortgage and the supplements thereto or any part thereof, or against the purchaser of said property or his successor or assigns, except that by leave of Court, claims so filed can be amended at any time prior to the distribution of the proceeds of sale. Notice of the allowance or disallowance of claims by the undersigned will be given in due course.

Dated: Cincinnati, January 17, 1919.

FRANK H. SHAFFER, Master Commissioner.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT, Southern District of New York.

Notice is given that Ocean Steamship Company of Savannah, as owner of the steamship City of Athens, and William G. McAdoo, as Director General of Railroads, have filed their petition for limitation of liability for loss, damage, injury or destruction from collision between French Cruiser "LA GLOIRE" and said vessel on May 1, 1918. Value of said vessel and freight fixed at $1,000. All persons claiming damages because of such loss, damage, injury or destruction must prove their claims before Herbert Green, Esq., Commissioner, at No. 1 Broadway, Borough of Manhattan, City, County and State of New York, or or before the 3d day of February, 1919, or be defaulted.

Dated, October 25, 1918.

THOMAS D. McCARTHY, U. S. Marshal.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT, Southern District of New York.

Notice is given that the New York Dock Company, owner of the float "New York Dock No. 3," has filed its petition for limitation of liability for any loss, destruction, damage, or injury from said vessel on or about the 14th day of December, 1917. Stipulated value of vessel and freight, Twenty-two thousand, seven hundred eighty-two and 42-100 ($22,782.42) Dollars. All persons claiming damages because of such loss, destruction, damage, or injury must prove their claims before HENRY E. MATTISON, Esq., Commissioner at No. 70 Wall Street, N. Y. C., on or before the 14th day of April, 1919, or be defaulted. THOS. D. McCARTHY, United States Marshal.

LABOR LEGISLATION A PEACE PROBLEM

SWISS TO SUBMIT PROGRAM

Memorandum of International Association Outlines Proposals for the Peace Treaty.

Meagre cable reports from Paris in the last week have stated that one of the important problems before the Peace Conference to be discussed soon will be the question of international protective labor legislation to prevent the possibility of the spread of class strife, due to Bolshevist propaganda.

No details as to the methods suggested have been reported, but it has become known that the American and British delegations have each prepared a plan for international labor legislation. It was learned yesterday that the International Association for Labor Legislation, with headquarters at Basle, Switzerland, will bring before the peace delegates, through the Swiss Government, proposals for a program of international labor legislation to be incorporated in the peace treaty and for its adoption by all the signatory powers.

An argument urged on behalf of the association's program is that its adoption would mean that no encouragement would be given to particular nations, by means of longer hours of labor and lower wages, in the intensive post-war competition of the various nations for trade. This, it is said, would prevent a policy of underselling and dumping, which, if it occurred, would, without doubt, be followed by a war of the consumers against the producers.

The Memorandum Submitted.

A translation in part of the original memorandum submitted to the Swiss Government, is as follows:

"The directorate of the International Association for Labor Legislation is convinced that the sections of the association fully agree with it that the treaties of Berne of 1906 and the drafts of 1913 form valuable initial steps toward a system of agreements for the protection of labor and that the mutual obligation of the various countries included in the peace treaty to develop this system would be of great importance. These obligations should include:

"1. The revival of the international protective labor treaties of Berne of 1906.

"2. The adoption of the draft of 1913 relating to the protection of juvenile workers with reservation of the right to shorten the ten-hour workday by the number of hours of attendance at continuation schools required, should attendance be made compulsory.

"3. The supplementation of the preceding agreement by one relating to the protection of children and establishing (after the model of Switzerland) 14 years as the minimum age for the admission to employment in all industrial establishments employing more than five workers, with the reservation of the right to raise this minimum if development of the continuation school system requires it, and advancing the minimum age to 16 years (after the model of most American mining States, Holland, Luxemburg, and Spain) for underground employment in mines.

"4. The adoption of the draft of 1913 relating to the ten-hour workday for female workers, supplemented by provisions requiring shorter hours on Saturdays in industrial establishments employing more than ten workers, whereby the weekly hours of labor would be reduced to fifty-four, (as in Norway,) and providing for eight weeks' leave for women with child, distributed over the period before and after confinement, (after the model of Germany and in supplementation of Article 69 of the Swiss Factory law.)

Eight-Hour Mining Shifts.

"5. The introduction of eight-hour shifts in mining (after the model of England) and in establishments with continuous operation, (in accordance with the principle laid down in Article 33, Paragraph 3, of the Swiss Factory Law,) which, according to the resolutions of the International Association, should form the subject of an international agreement to become effective after the conclusion of peace.

"6. The regulation by special agreement of the Sunday rest, and in particular the abrogation of the numerous exceptions from the Sunday and holiday rest.

"7. For protection against industrial poisoning, the addition to the international treaty of 1906 of Berne prohibiting the use of white phosphorus in the match industry, of an international prohibition of the use of other injurious substances (especially lead compounds) for which substitutes exist; and of an international prohibition of the employment of children and juveniles on work with such substances and, in establishments particularly dangerous for women, of the employment of women also.

"8. The enactment of international safety measures for workers engaged in international transportation on water and on land (after the model of the United States.)

"9. The assurance, through international agreement, of the protection of legal claims of workers abroad against unequal treatment with respect to their pension claims in all fields of social insurance, and provisions for the neutralization, even in case of war, of the insurance contribution of alien workers, through the transfer of their claims to a neutral country.

To Prevent International Disputes.

"10. The conclusion of a special agreement regulating the labor contract, in order to prevent international labor disputes. This agreement should guarantee the recognition of the rights of free coalition by a provision (like that of Switzerland) that collective agreements shall not be set aside by private special agreements (Articles 322, 323 of the Swiss law on obligations) and should assure the enactment of minimum wage laws, covering underpaid occupations, such as now are in force in Australia, England, France, Norway, and a number of States in the United States of America, and the introduction of which has been found necessary in Germany by the military authorities, for the clothing industry, and in Switzerland for the embroidery industry.

"11. Provisions for the protection of emigrant labor through international agreements and organizations; the limitation of the duration of the labor contracts of colonial contract to one-half year in mining and to a maximum of three years in agriculture, as proposed by the International Association for the Protection of Native Labor.

"12. A special international agreement providing that the reports of supervisory officials as to the enforcement of protective laws be made comparable in form.

"The International Association for Labor Legislation would be designated as the recognized official agency for the enforcement and promotion of protective labor legislation and would charge the International Labor Office in Basle created by it with the scientific preparation of the form which these reports shall take as a means of the international protection of labor. The signatory countries would have to assure the furnishing of the funds required for the development of the International Labor Office as a social-statistical central office and bureau of information.

"To each of the above agreements should be added a proviso under which the agreement could be amended every six to ten years in accordance with the progress of international labor legislation. These amendments would automatically replace the minimum demands incorporated in the peace treaty."

PRAISES PEACE LEAGUE.

House Cables Appreciation of Organization's Campaign.

In response to a cable message sent to Colonel E. M. House by the League to Enforce Peace, of which ex-President Taft is the head, in which it was pointed out to the President's personal adviser that Mr. Wilson's public denial that he had indorsed the league's particular plan for a League of Nations was hurting the whole campaign for such a league, Colonel House has written a letter expressing appreciation and approval of the league's campaign. The letter made public here yesterday by William H. Short, Secretary of the league, reads:

I am glad that you sent the cable that I received on Jan. 1 because it clears up what might have been an embarrassing situation. It is very encouraging to know of the work that you are doing in support of the President's general principles for a League of Nations. I feel most encouraged at the response by the allied statesmen and the peoples of the allied countries to the President's program respecting the league. I feel sure that the general principles underlying the organization will be agreed to at an early date.

You are doing a splendid work organizing public support for the league, and I wish you to know that your efforts are greatly appreciated.

President Wilson's original denial was called forth by a story in The Chicago Tribune, in which the President was represented as having indorsed the league's particular platform rather than the general idea of a League of Nations.

SAYS FRANCE PLANS FOR WAR-ZONE TRIPS

DIVIDE FRONT INTO SECTORS

States Battlegrounds Will Remain as When Germans Retreated, and That Guides Are Ready.

France plans to handle systematically the great influx of war sightseers who are expected when conditions permit, according to Lieutenant John M. Steele of the American Red Cross, who arrived Saturday on the Rochambeau after four months abroad. Lieutenant Steele, who served under Funston in the Philippines, said the Americans in France were surprised by the matter of fact way in which the National Touring Club of France is setting about with traditional French thriftiness to make the war pay for the war, or, at any rate, help out.

"I heard about the scheme to regulate the points of interest of the war," said Lieutenant Steele, "and I dropped into the Paris office of the National Touring Club to find out what was what. The club was organized two years before the war to catch the American tourist young and see that he left a fair share of his spending money in France before he left. Along came the war, and, of course, the club went to the front in horizon blue. Eighteen months ago, though, it was reborn with old points of interest to the Americans and hundreds of new historic places added.

"I learned that the club has cut the battle part of France up into twenty 'sectors' and that each will be mapped out and a guide book printed showing where such and such an incident of the war happened—a sort of thumbnail account. I heard that the guides are already rehearsing descriptions of the war's battles and that every time a guide relates a battle the number of German casualties goes up surprisingly. The club, according to the main office, plans to establish an information office in this city and in other American ports.

Plan Monuments for Americans.

"One of the plans of the organization is to erect monuments in the villages where Americans fought. It was reported in Paris, but I was unable to verify it, that the company had obtained a lease of part of the Marne battlefield. Already the company has sent circulars to the villages and towns requesting the Mayors to tell the folk not to remove signs of the war and to keep them bright for the expected tourists.

"One of the points that is expected to prove a gold mine is in the Argonne, near Varennes. It was captured by the Germans early in 1914, and on two hillsides and in the intervening valley the Germans erected permanent barracks for two divisions of troops. The piece de resistance of this spot is the 'Prince's dugout.' This was occupied by Prince Eitel Frederich and is a two-story frame building, with electric lights, tiled bathrooms, and mighty well furnished. Down in the valley the Germans put up a theatre, and the whole settlement was left untouched. The see-the-war-personally-conducted lads are thinking of turning the troop barracks into sleeping quarters for American tourists—they think it ought to go 'big'—and charge a couple of francs to inspect the Prince's habitat and a couple more to see movies of the German retreat in the theatre.

"As for the famous Hindenburg line—the club is going to get revenue out of that, too. The scheme, as I got it, is to make the sightseeing trips fit in with the nationality of the visitor. Some sector will be entirely for the British, points where the British forces fought; others will be for the American, like Château-Thierry, Cantigny, and the Verdun-Toul stretch."

AID FOR JEWS IN RUMANIA.

Guarantee of Emancipation Needed, Louis Marshall Says.

National and civil rights for the oppressed Jews in Rumania and the assistance that this country can give in bringing this about were discussed yesterday at the annual convention of the American Union of Rumanian Jews at the Park Avenue Hotel. Louis Marshall, Chairman of the American Jewish Committee, said he believed the conferees at Paris would solve the problem of the Rumanian Jew, but that, since the national Government of Rumania has continually broken its promises regarding the rights of the Jews, a guarantee of emancipation would have to be demanded.

Leo Wolfson, Chairman of the Executive Committee, and delegate of the Union of Rumanian Jews to the American Jewish Congress held at Philadelphia last month gave a résumé of the work done at the convention for the Jews in Rumania. He also said that, with the acquisition of Bessarabia last year in the treaty with Russia, many more Jews were added to Rumania's present population, and the conditions would therefore be worse instead of better.

Resolutions were adopted thanking President Wilson for his interest in behalf of the Rumanian Jews, requesting the American Jewish Congress to cooperate to the end that sufficient guarantee be exacted and obtained from Rumania, that the Jews be granted absolute and unconditional emancipation. Pierre A. Siegelstein, President, and Leo Wolfson, Chairman of the Executive Committee, were re-elected. Addresses were made by many of the delegates, including Dr. Henry Moskowitz, ex-President of the Municipal Civil Service Commission, and Dr. J. Gartenstein of Chicago.

OPPOSE HEAVY TAX ON FUR.

Merchants' Association Calls It an Unfair Burden on Industry.

The Merchants' Association is opposing that provision of the War Revenue bill which imposes a tax of 10 per cent. upon articles made of fur, and articles in which fur is the chief component of value, when sold by the manufacturer, producer or importer.

In view of the fact that 80 per cent. of the fur trade of the United States is concentrated in this district, the tax of 10 per cent., in addition to the excess profits tax of 80 per cent., would constitute an unfair burden upon the industry, according to the merchants' viewpoint. The effect would be a practical demonstration, they assert, of discrimination against the fur industry.

GOVERNOR SPENDS DAY HERE

He and Mrs. Smith Receive Friends and Attend Concert.

The Governor and Mrs. Smith, on their second Sunday at home since the inauguration and removal of the family to Albany, attended church and received some friends at their home, 25 Oliver Street, yesterday. In the afternoon they went to Brooklyn to visit the mother of the Governor.

Last night the family joined Alfred E. Smith, Jr., at a dinner at the Biltmore in recognition of his eighteenth birthday. The Governor then went to the Rev. Father McGean's concert at the Hippodrome, a benefit for the poor children of the Bowery. Governor Smith will return to Albany today.

ROB SICK FAMILY'S HOME.

Burglars Enter While Man, Wife, and Child Are in Hospital.

While Jacob Loafer was in Mt. Sinai Hospital, suffering from rheumatism, his wife, Rachel, a patient in Harlem Hospital, and their child in Mt. Sinai with influenza, their apartment at 210 East 102d Street was robbed on Saturday of valuables valued at $500.

According to Detectives Pasquale Marino and Joseph Ryan of the East 104th Street Station they heard of a plot to take advantage of the family's absence, and after the burglary arrested two negroes and recovered most of the stolen articles.

Indirect Labor+Fixed Charges=Overhead

Indirect labor cost is up until it constitutes the largest item of overhead in many concerns. Much indirect labor can be cut down or made more productive by changing its direction. This is particularly true in your file room.

By making your files the centre of impulse for your orders, correspondence, collections and other activities, based on documents, you make your file clerks executive.

Files which compel circulation of action-demanding papers speed up the activities of correspondents, facilitate reference, order filling, acknowledgments and stimulate those functions which increase good will from customers.

SENATE CAUCUS VOTES AT ALBANY FOR PROHIBITION

THREE ONLY OPPOSED IT

Walters, Lockwood, and Abeles Against—Sage Bolts the Caucus.

BILL IN FOR ENFORCEMENT

Walker Demands Drastic Measure to Make Dry Law Hit Both Rich and Poor.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, N. Y., Tuesday, Jan. 28.—By a vote of 25 to 3 the Republican members of the Senate voted in caucus at 1 o'clock this morning to sustain the Federal prohibition amendment when it comes up in the Senate today. If the Democrats oppose the amendment, the vote will go over until Wednesday. The caucus vote binds the Republican majority to vote for the Federal amendment when the question comes up for final passage.

Senator Henry M. Sage of Albany bolted the caucus, refusing to be bound by the majority vote. Senator Henry Walters, leader of the majority; Charles Lockwood of Brooklyn, and Peter Abeles of the Bronx voted against adopting the resolution. The three will be bound by the caucus, however, and they announced they would be ready to cast their votes in the Senate in favor of ratification on the final ballot. In the Senate the "drys" are sure of twenty-seven votes at least, one more than enough to adopt the resolution.

While the Republican Senators were arranging to go into caucus Senator James J. Walker of the Twelfth District, New York City, Democrat, started some fireworks in the Senate Chamber by introducing a search and seizure bill to provide for the enforcement of the new law.

"If we are going to have prohibition I am anxious to find out if it is to be an honest or a hypocritical measure," said the Senator.

"Which kind do you want?" broke in Senator George F. Thompson of Niagara, leader of the prohibition element.

"I know the kind you fathered," said Walker. "It was for the rich and not for the poor. You want to take a glass of beer away from the workingman while allowing the rich to have their cellars filled with wine. Some of your rich friends have a supply that will last two years, and I understand that 100,000 gallons of liquor have been stored away for use when the country becomes dry.

"Why, the cellars up in your county are full of the hardest kind of hard cider and real Jersey lightning. This measure you Republicans are fathering was born in hypocrisy, and there it will live. If we are going to have prohibition let us have the right kind. I want to go into the Fifth Avenue homes, where the rich never go thirsty, and search their cellars. You want to stop the workingman having his glass of beer out in the sunlight, but you do not want to stop the guy going down in the cellar and hitting the bottle of [mentioning a well-known patent medicine] which he has stored there for future use and taking four fingers for a hooker. You think you can take the flask off the poor man's hip, but you can't stop him from putting a hypo needle in his vest pocket. I want you Republicans to take my measure into your caucus tonight and decide upon a real search and seizure act that will apply to the rich as well as to the poor. Be at least consistent for once."

The Senator's remarks were greeted with laughter, and when Senator Thompson arose to reply he said it was his earnest hope that he never again would meet an intoxicated man or woman.

"I would like the Democratic Senator to read two years hence the Prohibition bill, and see what he thinks of it then," said Thompson.

"And I want to get a picture of you when you are reading it," retorted Walker.

James P. Holland, President of the New York Federation of Labor, sent a telegram to the Senate leaders last night asking that action on the ratification of the amendment be delayed for ten days, so as to give labor bodies of the State an opportunity to present a protest. Labor, he said, will be vitally affected by the bill, and should have a chance to be heard.

ATTACK ON GIBBONS.

Anti-Saloon Official Says Cardinal Perverted Facts to Fight Amendment.

The Anti-Saloon League and the pastors of many churches, at a union meeting held in the assembly hall of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company yesterday, celebrated the ratification of the National Prohibition Amendment and served notice that they will continue fighting for prohibition by fighting to see that the right kind of laws are passed for the rigid enforcement of the amendment. The principal speaker was former Governor Sanders of Louisiana. Among other things, Mr. Sanders said:

"As far as the prohibition question is concerned, a meeting like this is a post-mortem procedure. I do not feel as bitterly against the liquor interests as some feel, because I am Irish. I have always believed in the institution of the wake. If the New York papers, some of them, and some of the New York people want to sit up with the corpse of John Barleycorn, I am perfectly satisfied.

"You here in New York are going through in January what we went through in Louisiana last Summer. The only difference is that ours was a sub-

European Labor Disapproves Our Halting Immigration

PARIS, Jan. 27.—George Nicoll Barnes, labor representative on the British peace delegation, told members of the American press today that European labor, while unable to take any measures to prevent its passage, was strongly against such a law as that proposed by the American Federation of Labor, prohibiting immigration to the United States for some years after the signing of the peace treaty.

MOVES TO CONTROL ROADS' RETURN

FEARS PREMATURE DECISION

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 27.—One-third of all the railroad mileage in the country will be in the hands of receivers within sixty days if the roads are turned back immediately to their owners, without proper protective legislation, Senator Cummins of Iowa, ranking Republican member of the Interstate Commerce Committee, declared in debate today.

Fearful lest the President return the roads to private ownership at the close of the present session, without remedial legislation, the Senator introduced a bill to prevent the return before the expiration of twenty-one months after the peace treaty is ratified. Under the present law, by authority of which the Government operates the roads, the President cannot hold the roads more than twenty-one months after he proclaims peace, but can return them at any time within that period.

When former Director General McAdoo testified before the Senate committee, about two weeks ago, he expressed the opinion that, if the period of Federal control were not extended to a period of five years the roads should be turned back immediately.

The bill introduced by Senator Cummins is a substitute for the section of the present law allowing the President discretion in turning back the roads within the twenty-one-month period, and reads:

"That the Federal control of railroads and transportation systems herein and heretofore provided for shall continue for and during the period of the war and for one year and nine months next following the date of the proclamation by the President of the exchange of ratifications of the treaty of peace, unless Congress otherwise directs.

"No right to compensation shall accrue to such owners from and after the date of the relinquishment of the property so relinquished, whether returned at the end of said period or sooner by direction of Congress."

Discussing the testimony of Mr. McAdoo, Senator Cummins said:

"Inasmuch as Mr. Hines has stated that his policies will be the same as those of Mr. McAdoo, we may assume that it is the purpose of the Director General to return these properties to their owners, at the end or very soon after the end of the session, if Congress has not extended the period for five years.

"It is my opinion that Congress will not extend the period for that length of time. It is the overwhelming weight of opinion of bankers and railroad men and all other thoughtful persons who have communicated their views in any way that to return these properties to their owners without further legislation or some provision to care for their necessities, would be a universal disaster.

"I think all the members of the committee believe that we can propose to Congress a permanent policy of the readjustment or reorganization of the relationship between the railroads and the Government within a few months, and we believe that Congress will be able to agree within a year upon some enduring, general, permanent system for the control of these highways of commerce."

"I suppose," said Senator Thomas of Colorado, "the statement is made upon

THAMES SHIPWORKERS IDLE

Federation Official Says Men Are Being Misled by Irresponsible Agitators.

LONDON, Jan. 27.—The strike wave is extending, the greatest dislocation being at Belfast, where it is estimated that 100,000 shipyard employes and electricians have ceased work.

There are no trains or light in that city, and the bread supply is reduced to half. Telephone and telegraph services are threatened.

The linen mills use their own steam plants, and in daytime work proceeds there as usual, but lack of illumination compels a stoppage of at dusk. Grave diggers in the city cemetery threaten to strike in sympathy.

A deputation of strikers met the civil officials of Belfast and offered to permit power to be generated for the hospitals on condition that none was used for public or private purposes. The officials intimated that they had no power to make such terms.

Sunday evening services in the churches were abandoned.

The strikers get little sympathy from the rest of the population, owing to their arbitrary action in refusing to negotiate with the employers. They are being urged on by labor delegates from the Clyde. Heavy snowstorms have added to the sufferings of the populace.

About 20,000 men, chiefly shipyard employes, are idle on the Clyde. The strikers there refuse to pay rent or income tax. The stoppage so far is only partial, and, apart from the shipyards, many men have resumed work. The strike is not sanctioned by the Executive Committee of the men's unions.

London Ship Workers Out.

The London shipbuilding industry is paralyzed by a strike of about 15,000 workmen in the dry docks and repair yards of the Thames. They demand a wage increase of 15 shillings weekly, which the employers say they are determined not to grant.

Six thousand South Wales coal miners ceased work to enforce the reinstatement of discharged soldiers, and the colliery managers threaten to strike in order to get their union recognized.

Five thousand men, mostly iron molders, shipwrights, and engineers, are striking at Edinburgh and Leith for a forty-hour week, with no reduction in wages.

In Fifeshire 24,000 miners are still out over the forty-seven-hour week dispute.

A strike of Dublin's corporation employes has been avoided by the corporation granting their demand for a forty-seven-hour week.

Nottinghamshire miners numbering 40,000 are preparing to lay down their tools unless the system of loading coal with forks is abolished and shovels are substituted. They also demand a forty-nine-hour week, with twenty minutes' interval for meals.

Each Soldier Abroad Costs Government $2,000 a Year

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 27.—It will cost the Government $2,000 a year to maintain each soldier abroad.

This was the estimate given before the House Committee on Appropriations by Brig. Gen. Robert Wood in the course of the hearings relative to appropriations for the army.

"Two thousand dollars?" questioned one member of the committee incredulously.

"Yes, $2,000—that is, including transportation, and even when the soldier is not in active operations," replied General Wood.

CONFEREES AGREE ON REVENUE BILL

HIGHER TAX ON PROFITS

Oil and Gas Allowances Also Approved, It Is Understood, and Mail Rate Reform Dropped.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 27.—A basis for complete agreement on the War Revenue bill was reached late today by the Senate and House conferees. Senator Simmons, Chairman of the Senate Managers, announced that virtually all important questions remaining in dispute, including the war excess profits rates, had been agreed upon and that all possibility of a deadlock and failure of the bill had passed.

Announcement of the conference agreement on the war profits and other basic disputes was deferred, but it was said that it would be made Wednesday or Thursday, when a reprint of the bill as finally agreed to would be completed. The conference report is expected to be presented to the Senate and House late this week and the conferees hope it will be adopted by both bodies next week and the bill sent to President Wilson at Paris for his approval.

The basis of agreement on the measure was upon three bitterly contested questions—war excess profits taxes this year, the Senate amendments to oil and gas interests, and the Senate amendment to repeal the existing zone system of second-class mail rates. It was learned that in harmonising differences on these basic disputes the conferees agreed to an increase of the Senate war excess profits rates, adopted the oil provision substantially as provided by the Senate, and eliminated the second-class mail amendment.

The amendment on war excess profits rates for 1919, it was stated, provided for retention of the Senate rate of 30 per cent on corporations' net income in excess of credits and not in excess of 20 per cent. of invested capital, for increase from 60 to 65 per cent. on income in excess of 20 per cent., and for retention of the 60 per cent. tax on war profits. The higher rates were strongly urged by Representative Kitchin and others of the House managers.

The Senate conferees were reported to have won their fight for retention of the Senate provision for a tax exemption of 20 per cent. on bona fide sales of oil and gas wells and mines. This provision, designed to protect and stimulate prospects, was opposed by the House managers as too liberal, but they finally yielded after the Senate conferees had accepted the higher rates on war excess profits.

Elimination of the second-class postage amendment had been generally expected. The proposal has been bitterly opposed by Representative Kitchin and other of the House conferees. It provided for repeal of the present zone rates on second-class mail based on the proportion of news and advertising and for substitution of a new zone plan of one cent a pound on periodicals within the first and second class parcel post zones and one and a half cents a pound beyond that radius. The present rates have been vigorously attacked by publishers as unjust and in some cases confiscatory.

With the basis reached for settling these three vital disputes, agreement on other provisions of the bill still left open was regarded as certain. Among these are the amendment to prevent importation of intoxicating liquors into the District of Columbia for beverage purposes, the amendment of Senator Thomas of Colorado levying a tax of 100 per cent. on political campaign contributions in excess of $500 and that of Senator Trammell of Florida, to allow a bonus of one month's pay and uniforms to men discharged from the military service. Conferees said the "bone dry" amendment would be retained, but the fate of the others was in doubt.

Other amendments remaining to be acted upon are several of the so-called "relief" provisions of the Senate war excess profits section, some dependent upon the basis of agreement on rates reached by the conferees. Many administrative provisions also remain for final action.

REDS CAPTURE SHENKURSK AND ALLIES' SUPPLIES

AMERICANS NEARLY CAUGHT

ARCHANGEL MUCH WORRIED

Allies Outnumbered Vastly in Men and Guns—Temperature 30 Below Zero.

ARCHANGEL, Sunday, Jan. 26, (Associated Press.)—The Bolsheviki, who have apparently begun an earnest attempt to carry out their threat to drive the Allies into the White Sea by March, are now on the offensive with infantry or artillery, or both, against four of the seven thin columns of the Allies and Russians which have penetrated southward through the frozen forest swamps of the Province of Archangel.

Last night the enemy entered Shenkursk, while the tired column of Americans, Russians, and British, which had evacuated Shenkursk, marched in a roundabout détour over the deep snow on the road, evading a force of several hundred of the enemy who waited on the main high road to trap the column in its retreat. Shenkursk, composed largely of brick or wooden houses with a large convent, was extremely vulnerable to artillery fire.

In good spirits, despite long marches in the cold and ten days of hard fighting, the Americans and the other troops of the allied force were today at Shegovari, approximately thirty miles north of Shenkursk on the Vaga River. The enemy apparently is sending patrols to follow the retreating troops, but up to this morning no new attacks had been made on this sector.

Foe Repulsed at Taraseva.

Saturday the Bolsheviki attacked the allied positions at Taraseva, a village some forty miles east of Shenkursk in the sector between the Vaga River and the Vologda Railroad. They were repulsed with heavy losses, the Americans, British, and Russian troops fighting with such valor that the enemy column which attacked on the left of Taraseva along the Kotchmas road retired in considerable disorder, leaving twenty men dead in the snow, mown down by the allied machine-gun fire. On the right of the village an enemy column was spotted by the American artillery and retreated under a rain of shells.

On the Dvina River no infantry attacks have yet developed, although the enemy artillery continues a heavy bombardment at Tulgas. On the Vologda Railroad the enemy's armored train continues to shell the allied positions, and recently his patrols, moving over frozen trails in the swamps which were impassable in the Summer, have attempted bombing raids against American outposts.

Allied headquarters here in announcing today that the evacuation of Shenkursk on Saturday was to avoid the possibility of a long seige, revealed that it was only by a ruse that an American battalion and other allied forces succeeded in escaping from being surrounded.

The Bolsheviki, who had already closed in on the town from the south, east, and west, had appeared in considerable numbers on the highway north of the town and had cut all telegraph wires. To escape them the American troops, approximately four battalions under command of Lieut. Col. Corbley, slipped out of the town along a seldom used trail through the swamps, bringing with them virtually all their equipment.

The Bolsheviki, however, captured a large store of provisions which the garrison was unable to burn for fear of revealing the intention to withdraw. All the American guns were either removed or rendered useless. A number of wounded in the American hospital were removed in sleds.

A large number of peasants and Russian partisan troops moved out with the American forces. In the fighting near Shenkurst Russian troops fought side by side with the Americans, British, and French with great bravery. Allied airplanes, despite the severe cold, flew low over the roads wherever the slow-moving Bolshevist sled transports were seen and bombs dropped on them. The aviators also attacked the Bolsheviki with machine-gun fire.

The Bolshevist offensive began with small raids and a bombardment of Ust Padenga, which was the most southernly position held by the Allies on this front. The first attacks were repulsed, but the Americans and Russians garrisoning the town were subjected to a rain of approximately 1,000 shells daily for a week.

On Jan. 9, 1,000 Bolshevist infantry attacked Kibagoraki on the Tarnia River, thirty miles west of Shenkursk in the direction of the Vologda Railway. The Russian Cossacks and allied infantry there withdrew about ten miles to Shishevo, which the Bolsheviki occupied on Jan. 20. The Cossacks counterattacked the next day with the object of retaking Shishevo, but were forced to withdraw in the face of superior numbers.

In the direction of the Dvina River, a small outpost thirty miles east of Shenkursk, was attacked on Jan. 21 by

BIG POWERS DISCUSS GERMAN COLONIES; SMALL NATIONS ABANDON THEIR PROTEST AND NAME PEACE CONFERENCE DELEGATES

North Russians Averse to Parley With Reds; Recall Allies' Rejection of Pope's Proposal

ARCHANGEL, Jan. 26, (Associated Press.)—Officials of the Government of Northern Russia are silent regarding the proposal for a conference of the Russian factions on the Princes' Islands pending receipt of an official invitation asking them to take part. The official press also has nothing to say, but editorial comment in other newspapers today indicates there will probably be strong objection to parleying with the Bolsheviki.

The independent newspaper Olecheobo says:

"The proposition to converse with the Bolsheviki is similar to the proposal made by the Pope during the war for the Allies to converse with the Hohenzollerns. At that time the Allies answered that they did not trust the Germans and that they would not talk with murderers and criminals. In the same way and with analogous motives it is necessary to state clearly that it is impossible to hold conversations with the Bolsheviki.

"Bolshevism, like imperialism before the débâcle in Germany, is not only a threat to Russia, but to the entire world."

RUSSIANS SILENT ON ALLIED OFFER

No Direct Reply to Princes' Islands Parley Proposal Yet Received from Any Faction.

FRENCH ARE NOT SORRY

Socialists of France Told by Leader They Must Not Follow Wilson, but Lenine.

PARIS, Jan. 27.—No direct reply to the invitation extended to the various Russian factions for a conference with representatives of the allied and associated Governments has so far been received from any quarter. The protests which have been filed by the anti-Bolshevist elements in Paris are not regarded as fully authorized by their Governments, and the reply sent out by M. Tchitcherin, the Bolshevist Foreign Minister, by wireless through Stockholm and addressed to a Paris newspaper is considered as being altogether unofficial.

It was stated today that no announcement would be made at present regarding the status of the Russian problem. The next move, it may be said, however, will probably be to bring up the matter again before the council for further study before a course to be followed shall be adopted. Meanwhile, naturally, there will be no announcement concerning the personnel of the commission which will go to Princes' Islands to represent the Entente and the United States in the event, which now seems unlikely, that acceptances come from the Russian factions.

At an agitated Socialist meeting here yesterday M. Loriot declared that the Socialists of France must make a choice between following President Wilson or Premier Lenine of Russia. After the Socialist leaders, Albert Thomas, Pierre Renaudel, and M. Longuet were shouted down when they tried to speak, M. Loriot said:

"President Wilson is an able man who is seeking to save the bourgeoisie, but he must not be followed. The moment has come to choose between him and Lenine."

PARIS, Jan. 26.—Stephen Pichon, the French Foreign Minister, who followed the example this morning of the American, British, and Italian delegates to the Peace Conference in giving a group interview to the press representatives of the world, improved somewhat on the methods of others who have had most to say about the advantage of publicity and then shrunk most from it. M. Pichon not only said one or two things that are significant and interesting, but gave the correspondents the biggest surprise of their Peace Conference experience so far by declaring that he could be quoted on everything he had said.

His conversation was chiefly about the failure of the Bolsheviki and other Russian factions to accept the invitation of the American and allied Governments for a meeting at Princes' Islands. Furthermore, M. Pichon admitted that the Bolsheviki had a de facto Government as one of several Governments now existing in Russia. He seemed to have little expectation that a conference with the Bolsheviki would take place on Princes' Islands or anywhere else, and it was not difficult to imagine that he was rather pleased than otherwise in view of the fact that he had previously rejected the Lloyd George proposal for such a conference and that subsequent to that refusal the French Government had yielded to America and Great Britain in the matter against its own judgment.

As to whether the Allies would entertain a suggestion from the Bolsheviki for a meeting at some place more accessible than Princes' Islands, M. Pichon said the question had not arisen. He also declared that the Allies had not determined what the next step in the Russian situation would be should all the Russian groups finally refuse the invitation now pending.

That is about all that was said. If it

PARIS, Jan. 26.—Compromise remains the watchword of the Peace Conference. Premier Clemenceau spoke of his own sacrifices of personal views yesterday. Stephen Pichon emphasized the same point today. The smaller nations who, it may be stated with authority, are aggrieved at being officially relegated as a body to a class "with particular interests," are as a whole taking the attitude that compromise between the great powers spells dictation to the small powers.

With the Wilsonian principles as a guiding star, heaven may be reached, it is argued in some quarters here, but there will be some victims on every round of Jacob's ladder leading to the Gates of Paradise.

The League of Nations is that ladder. Skeptics still regard it as a very incomplete apparatus.

M. Pichon said today that its construction would proceed, step by step, with territorial settlements. In other words, the League of Nations is to be the consecration of the decisions of the conference, and to be the power enforcing those decisions. French claims to Syria and Arabian aspirations in the same quarter, he said, could be reconciled by mutual give and take. The French demands for a safe frontier on the east had not yet been authoritatively defined. It was incorrect to say that France wanted possession of all the territory on the left bank of the Rhine. It was also incorrect to say that France wanted to neutralize that territory. It was incorrect to say that France wanted to continue the military occupation of that territory. M. Pichon denied all these suppositions. He declined to state more explicitly what France considered essential to the security of her eastern frontier. The suggestion was made that the French demands in this respect would be governed by the progress made toward a practical realization of the League of Nations, with its concomitant of limitation of armaments and the resultant possibilities of aggression.

All this shows how carefully the conference is feeling its way. It has put two objectives before it, both to be reached simultaneously. One is the conclusion of peace to end the present war. The other is the preservation of future peace.

Until President Wilson arrived in Europe, the prevalent idea among statesmen here was that the present necessities must be dealt with before the future requirements could be legislated for. President Wilson believed that guarantees for the future were the best foundation for the settlement of the immediate problems. The result is a compromise. The work of making peace is to go on side by side with the work of securing the peace, once it is made. Obviously, the practical formulation of the League of Nations ideal must be synchronous with the formulation of the concrete terms of peace, if these aspirations are to be realized.

DIFFERENCES ARE REMOVED

COMMITTEES BEGIN WORK

Two New Ones Are Authorized, One on Finances and Another on Maritime Laws.

PRESIDENT IS VERY BUSY

Confers with Col. House, Cecil, American Labor Leaders, and China's Delegates.

PARIS, Jan. 27, (Associated Press.)—The Peace Conference today made a distinct gain when the nineteen small powers gave full adhesion to the organization formulated by the five great powers, thus insuring a united front of the great and small powers at the outset of the work on the main subjects before the members of the commissions.

This was largely due to the skilful direction of M. Jules Cambon, French delegate and former Ambassador at Washington, who was designated by the council of the great powers to preside over the meeting of the small powers held this afternoon at the Foreign Office, at the same time that the council of the great powers met for the second session of the day.

For a time there was some apprehension of the sequel to the different viewpoints, expressed at Saturday's conference, but today's meeting of the small powers was without incident or renewal of the claims then set up for increased representation on the various committees.

Belgium, Serbia, Rumania, and all the other small powers had their full delegations at the afternoon meeting. M. Cambon, in opening the meeting, took occasion to refer to the great part that Belgium had taken in the war. He then paid tribute to the parts played by Serbia, Rumania, Greece, and the others. This dissipated any lingering shadows of disagreement, and the meeting proceeded with entire harmony to designate the members of the small powers on the commissions.

The Council of the Great Powers held its first session of the day at 10:30 o'clock in the morning. There was a full attendance of the members, and several technical advisers on colonial matters, including three Americans, accompanied the delegations as they entered the Foreign Office.

The two sessions of this council resulted in the formation of two new commissions, to deal with financial subjects and with questions of private and maritime laws.

While the official communiqué gives no indication of the nature of the questions of "maritime laws," it would seem to be a term embracing President Wilson's second point—freedom of the seas.

The council also held hearings on the disposition of the conquered German colonies in the Pacific and the Far East, no final conclusion being reached. The Chinese Minister of Foreign Affairs was heard on colonial questions in which China is interested. China is concerned largely in Kiao-Chau, which was occupied by the Germans until they were dispossessed by Japan.

Committees Getting to Work.

The conference is giving evidence of real progress since the committees were named, and most of these bodies began work today.

President Wilson, who is Chairman of the Committee on the League of Nations, joined his colleague, Colonel House, also a member of that committee, during the noon recess of the council. Later Lord Robert Cecil, British member of the committee, joined him in further consideration of the questions which the President and Colonel House had examined.

After this conference the President conferred with Wellington Koo, Chinese Minister at Washington, and Lu Cheng-Hsiang, Chinese Foreign Minister. He also received a delegation of French suffragettes.

The Labor Commission also began to frame its work. President Wilson met Samuel Gompers, President of the American Federation of Labor; James Duncan, John R. Alpine, and other members of the American labor delegation, for a brief exchange of greet-

Ocean Freight Rates Cut to One-Third By American and British Governments

The British Ministry of Shipping, at 165 Broadway, announced yesterday that freight rates on vessels free from Government requisition had been reduced 66 2-3 per cent. on shipments from the United States to Great Britain. This applies to all export commodities with the exception of cotton, which usually is classified under a special rating. This ruling also applies to British ships which have from 20 to 30 per cent. of their cargo space available, the rest being under the control of the Ministry of Shipping.

Shipping men said yesterday that this meant that the rate of $3.50 per 100 pounds weight to Europe had been reduced to $1, and by measurement the rate of $1.75 per foot would now be 50 cents. They did not think the change would be discouraging to shipowners, because it would cause a development in the commerce from American ports and tend to hasten the return of the business to normal conditions. The costs of operating steamships were very high at the present time, it was said, but it was quite possible, with the reduction in freight rates, that there would still be a small margin of profit.

American Rates Cut.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 27.—To meet the cut in transatlantic freight rates made by the British Ministry of Shipping, the Shipping Board tonight announced a reduction of about 66 2-3 per cent. in charges between Atlantic and Gulf ports and the United Kingdom, France, Italy, Belgium, and the Netherlands.

To Marseilles, Cette, Genoa, and Naples the new rate is $1.60 per 100 pounds, or 85 cents per cubic foot against the old rate of $75 per ton, rates based on weight or measurement at ship's option.

The new rate to the United Kingdom is $1 per 100 pounds, or 60 cents a cubic foot, against the old rate of $66 a ton, while the rate to Havre, Bordeaux, Antwerp, and Rotterdam is $1.25 per 100 pounds, or 65 cents per cubic foot, against the old charge of $65 a ton.

At the same time the board announced new rates from Atlantic and Gulf ports to ports in India as follows: To Colombo and Calcutta, $1.10 per 100 pounds or 60 cents per cubic foot, as against the old rate of $45 a ton, and to Rangoon and Madras, $1.20 per 100 pounds or 65 cents a cubic foot, as against the former charge of $50 a ton.

ings, and later Mr. Gompers and Edward N. Hurley, who are the American members of the Labor Commission, held their first conference on the work ahead.

The military commission on demobilization also had a session, while M. Pichon completed the draft of instructions for the commission which leaves for Poland in a few days. Joseph Noulens, French Ambassador to Russia, has been selected by the French Government as one of the members of this commission.

Henry White, the American delegate on the Waterways Commission, also established relations with his colleagues of that body.

Thus real progress on all the main subjects is becoming apparent as the commissions are beginning to formulate detailed projects for presentation to the conference.

Official Accounts of the Meetings.

The official statement concerning the sessions of the Supreme Council reads:

The President of the United States, the Prime Ministers and Foreign Ministers of the allied and associated powers and the Japanese representative met this morning at the Quai d'Orsay from 10:30 o'clock to 12:30 o'clock and defined a program of work and the constitution of new committees for economic and financial questions as well as questions relating to private and maritime laws.

The afternoon session continued the exchange of views on the former German colonies in the Pacific and the Far East. The representatives of the Dominions and of China were heard.

The next meting will take place tomorrow at 11 o'clock in the morning.

This official statement was issued concerning the session of the representatives of the smaller powers;

The representatives of the powers with special interests met this afternoon at 3 o'clock at the Quai d'Orsay under the presidency of M. Jules Cambon, Ambassador and French delegate at the Peace Conference, to appoint members of the missions in accordance with the decisions of the plenary session of Saturday, Jan. 25. The following were appointed:

France-British Agreement on Cenoxies?

Concerning the fate of the German colonies, France and Great Britain, it is stated, are agreed upon at least one feature of the solution of the problem, which is that under no consideration shall the colonies revert to Germany. The reasons advanced for such a decision are various, but prominent among them is that it would render it impossible for Germany to establish submarine bases in her colonial possessions. The American attitude is as yet unrevealed.

A prominent official told The Associated Press today that should the Franco-British viewpoint prevail, the German Kamerun would be taken over by the French, in accordance with an agreement reached by Great Britain and France. Belgium lays claim to that part of the Congo which she conquered by force of arms, the Belgian troops having captured Tabora and the territory lying beyond the western slopes of Lake Victoria Nyanza. The Belgians also desire a strip of territory along the left bank of the Congo, the delimitation, of course, to be settled amicably with Portugal, territorial compensation being given the latter.

There appears every prospect that the Peace Conference will make rapid progress from now on with the work of fixing the peace terms for Germany, as the conference appears to have gotten into its stride.

A high French diplomatic authority is quoted by the Paris edition of The London Daily Mail as estimating that the conference will have the peace terms ready for submission for ratification by the various national Governments between the middle and the end of March. If this is accomplished, the German delegates will be summoned to Paris early in April for the conclusion of peace.

WILSON IS STIRRED BY RUINED RHEIMS

PRELATE SHOWS CATHEDRAL

Cardinal Lucon Gives Him a Stained-Glass Panel—Chateau-Thierry Field Visited.

PARIS, Jan. 27, (Associated Press.—President and Mrs. Wilson returned to Paris at 9:30 o'clock Sunday night from their visit to Rheims. There was a heavy snowfall during the day, but Mr. and Mrs. Wilson were received at Rheims by a crowd which gave them a cordial greeting.

They were met at the Cathedral by Cardinal Lucon, who conducted them through the ruined edifice. After a minute inspection of the Cathedral, Mr. and Mrs. Wilson went to La Pompelle fortress, southeast of Rheims, which they inspected before starting on their return journey.

At the close of his tour, which embraced the Chateau-Thierry district and took him through a dozen razed villages, the President made this comment:

"No one can put into words the impressions I have received among such scenes of desolation and ruin."

That was Mr. Wilson's only expression of his feelings after a trip that every Frenchman has been hoping he would make before he took part in deciding what was to be exacted from Germany for the devastation of Northern France.

Accompanied by Mrs. Wilson, Admiral Grayson and a very small party, Mr. Wilson left the Murat residence early yesterday morning, foregoing attendance at church and the rest which he felt he needed very much to perform what he said he considered to be a duty. The party motored first to Chateau-Thierry, where luncheon was taken on board a waiting train. It then proceeded by motor to Rheims, passing, through many ruined villages and along the old fighting lines, where evidences of combat are still to be plainly seen. After visiting Rheims, the President and his party abandoned their motor cars, and, boarding a special train, returned to Paris. The last part of the motor trip was made in a swirling snowstorm, the first snow Mr. Wilson has seen since last Winter.

Visit to Belleau Wood.

The first fighting ground was reached as the party neared Belleau Wood, immortalized in the history of the war by the gallant fighting of American marines. The motor cars turned off the main roads and crawled through back lanes to bring the President close to the place where the fighting took place.

The country folk in that neighborhood are striving to reclaim their soil from war's desolation. The farmers were plowing the shell-cratered fields as the President stood beside the graves of one hundred or more American boys who gave their lives at that point and looked across the valley to Belleau Wood, a mangled mass of tree trunks and underbrush, but now a national monument to the marines, after whom the French Government has named the place.

Col. Edward M. Watson, of Martinsville, Va., who commanded an artillery battalion in the fight and was later Chief of Staff of the Seventy-seventh Division in the Argonne fighting, stood beside President Wilson and Brig.-Gen. William W. Harts and told the story of the battle in detail.

Then Mr. Wilson drove up the hill on which the American troops smashed the crack Prussian divisions mustered there to crush the "greenhorns," and where the advance on Paris was checked. This was near Château-Thierry, and the spot promises to be a Mecca for Americans for many years to come. Mr. Wilson saw the ruins of bridges over which the Americans thrust back the enemy line at this nearest point to Paris, and the shell-marked houses which survived the battles of those memorable days.

When the President entered Château-Thierry, the Mayor greeted him, and he responded quite informally. He then drove on towards Rheims, passing along the old battleline between long lines of barbed wire entanglements now rusting away in the first Winter of peace, between long muddy trenches reaching over the hills and down into hollows as far as the eye could see, and past the wrecks of dugouts, ammunition dumps, aviation sheds, hospitals, barracks and all the other litter left behind by the defeated enemy in his flight.

American, as well as French, graves lay along the roadside. There were German graves to be seen, too. Desecrated cemeteries were found in many cases. At every turn of the road was a farm, deserted and in ruins, its fields dotted with shell holes filled with water and crusted over with ice. There was a constant panorama of destroyed or charred vineyards, gardens, and homes.

The President was welcomed at Rheims by the Mayor and a committee, to whom Mr. Wilson explained that he had not come to the devastated region sooner because he had been wholly engaged at Paris with the business of making peace. Before going to the cathédral, he passed through the streets of a deserted city which was once the home of 115,000 people, but where fewer than 5,000 are now eking out an existence among the ruins. He visited Red Cross canteens where hundreds of destitute persons are fed night and day, and the hospital where the sick and injured are cared for. The champagne cellars beneath the city, said to contain some 70,000,000 bottles of wine, were not visited.

A light blanket of snow covered the ground as the President drove up to the cathedral, and Rheims, ravished and naked in all its misery and desolation, looked like a graveyard in the moonlight. There were more crows in the air, circling over the ruined town, than there were human beings, below in the littered streets.

Cardinal Lucon, Archbishop of Rheims, who stood steadfastly by his charge for four years, during which time scarcely a day passed without a German shell hurling death into the city, met the President at the fence of rough boards which now excludes curiosity seekers and incloses the rubbish to which this historic edifice has been reduced. The Cardinal conducted Mr. Wilson to the nave of the cathedral, where in 1914 the Germans during their short occupation of the city placed their wounded, and then, being forced to evacuate, burned their men to death by incendiary shells that fired the roof, but did not damage the vault.

All over the flagging, worn smooth through the years by millions of feet bringing Frenchmen to an hour's devotion, were piled heaps of rubbish, fragments of statues and frescoes and fragments of columns and sculptures which were accounted the finest examples of Gothic art. As the President and the Cardinal stood together, looking upward, while the prelate briefly recounted the story of four years of constant destruction, they looked straight through to the clouded sky. The snow flurry that was covering the bare ruins of the city outside was also falling as a blanket upon the inside of the cathedral.

The chalky stone of Champagne, of which the cathedral was built, is scaling off from the effects of German fire, and the piles of debris were mixed with an almost constant dropping of fragments. Pausing a moment before the scene of the Crucifixion above the north door, and before the painting of the Coronation of the Virgin, over the central door, Mr. Wilson silently viewed the destruction wrought upon those masterpieces by the burning of the scaffolding when the Germans set fire to the roof of the edifice.

Ruins of statues lie about the side door, and the great rose window, said to be the most beautiful in the world, where Field Marshal von Moltke, in 1870, sat and watched the sunset, is shattered to shell fire until it looks like camouflage set up by the roadside. Mr. Wilson followed the Cardinal to the ruins of the chapel, where oldtime Kings watched through the night at the time of their anointing, and to the ruins of the sacristium, where priceless Flemish tapestries were ruined. Mr. Wilson was shown where thousands of shells thrown from German batteries on two sides burst among the buttresses which support the main structure and where forests of sculptures which ornament the structure have been scarred, nicked and torn by fragments from the big shells, very few of which, however, reached the vault.

Part of the vault, however, lies a heap of twisted and crumpled wreckage upon the main altar, where it was thrown by explosions which wrecked most of the stained glass thirteenth century windows. Cardinal Lucon took Mr. Wilson outside, and they picked their way through rubbish heaps to a point from which they could view the shell-riddled painting of the Last Judgment, above the south door, the symbols from Noah's Ark about the great rose window, the statue of St. Anne and other beautiful works of art of which virtually none escaped.

Rheims Relic for the President

As they left the Cathedral, the Cardinal gave the President a stained glass panel from one of the windows taken down in time to save it. The panel is unscarred. It is circular and about three feet in diameter. It shows a figure of the Saviour done in many-colored glass of the early centuries.

From the Cathedral the President drove to view the ruins of the Hotel de Ville, a specimen of the Renaissance style of architecture, and the Palais Royale, an eighteenth century edifice. These two, with the Cathedral, comprised the most celebrated historical memorials of Rheims, and not one has escaped.

BRUSSELS, Jan. 26.—President Wilson intends to accept the invitation of King Albert to visit Brussels, it is said in well-informed circles, but has not fixed the date for his trip because of the press of business at Paris.

COMPROMISE STILL CONFERENCE HOPE

view of those who are skeptical as to the probability of this double consummation being arrived at, when he said yesterday that he would like to have an opportunity of discussing the scheme of the League of Nations "when it is finished." His emphasis on the last four words was marked. To those Europeans who are in fullest sympathy with the Wilsonian ideals, the difficulties with which he is faced give special meaning to the description of crusaders which he yesterday applied to himself and his countrymen. There were many crusades.

There is no indiscretion in stating that one of the definite questions which will be put to the American delegates will be what part the United States is prepared to take in bearing the "white man's burden," with particular application to policing, administering, and politically educating the backward Asiatic and African peoples. It has been a matter of open discussion in London for some time past that proposals bearing on this subject would be submitted by the British delegates to the Peace Conference; and that the French Government is considering similar action is evident from an editorial in tonight's Temps. After referring to the American reluctance to break with the Monroe Doctrine by accepting a mandate to interfere in countries which are satellites of Europe, the Temps argues that the mission of aiding formerly oppressed peoples, such as exist in Central Asia, is not an imperialistic mission, but one that springs from the crusading spirit which brought American soldiers across the Atlantic.

COLONIES A VITAL ISSUE.

English Writer Says One Power May Hold Them Under Mandate.

LONDON, Jan. 27.—Discussing the methods which the Peace Conference will follow to settle territorial questions, the Paris correspondent of The Daily Telegraph says that when serious difficulties are met they will be referred to a special commission instituted for the purpose of considering them.

The colonial problems were examined for the first time on Friday, the correspondent states, the fate of the German colonies in the Pacific being taken up. No other territorial features were discussed, except for a brief reference to the East African territory toward the end of the meeting.

Premiers Hughes of Australia and Massey of New Zealand, the writer continues, have asked the Peace Conference to sanction the Anglo-Japanese agreement of February, 1917, allocating the German possessions south of the equator to Australia and New Zealand. They emphasized the contributions made by their respective countries to the allied cause in the war and the reasonableness of some compensation. Furthermore, they argued, any attempt to apply the right of self-determination to the southern islands would lead to failure.

The French Government, which the correspondent represents as full of admiration for the exertions of the British dominions, is anxious, he says, to show its appreciation. He says, furthermore, that at the opening of the conference on the Pacific islands Premier Lloyd George, in agreement with President Wilson, stated that there was no question of returning the colonies to Germany. The only point at issue, the writer asserts, is whether the German colonies shall be placed under an international government or if a single power shall be trusted with the management of them with a mandate from the League of Nations.

LEAGUE ASSOCIATIONS MEET.

Hold Promptly Urges the Ending of Secret Diplomacy.

PARIS, Jan. 26.—Leon Bourgeois, President of the French Association for the Society of Nations, presided this afternoon at a meeting of representatives of allied countries who have come to Paris to work for the adoption of the plan for a League of Nations. He asked the delegates present to formulate a program that might facilitate the task of the Peace Congress.

Hamilton Holt, one of the American delegates, insisted upon the necessity for eliminating secret diplomacy. The meeting adopted a motion favoring the establishment of the league and will continue its work tomorrow.

TO BETTER CABLE SERVICE.

Tardieu Says Measures Are Afoot to Prevent Delay of Dispatches.

PARIS, Jan. 27.—At a luncheon given today at the French Club for members of the foreign press, which was attended by more than 300 newspapermen, political leaders and diplomats, Captain André Tardieu, head of the general commission for Franco-American war matters, told the newspapermen that measures had been taken to remedy the delay in transmission on the French cables and that efforts were being made to handle all foreign copy with as little delay as possible. Captain Tardieu said that arrangements were being made to handle all copy possible through London in order to relieve the pressure on the French cables.

Stephen Pichon, French Foreign Minister, in an address protested against the accusations of imperialism which, he said, had been made against France by some persons.

"France's wish," he said, "is merely to be the defender of justice and right." Sir George Riddell, an English newspaper publisher, responded to the speeches on behalf of the journalists.

PARIS, Jan. 27.—Wire conditions between Paris and the United States are the subject of a memorial which American correspondents are preparing to present to the American peace delegates tomorrow. The Italian press is equipped with a direct wire to Rome and is not required to submit dispatches to the French or Italian censors. The British are organizing facilities for getting news to publish. The American press matter is still subject to military censorship, both French and American, in contravention of the armistice agreement just before President Wilson left America that the censorship was lifted. It was declared that the censors would not interfere with political comment and Peace Congress news, but apply only to references to troops. Regardless of whether it was blue-pencilled or not, the process seriously delays transmission.

DEPLORES ALLIED POLICY IN RUSSIA

ASSAILS BOLSHEVIST RULE

Calls Soviets Criminals, Controlling Only a Part of Country by Holdup Measures.

A. J. Sack, Director of the Russian Information Bureau, in a statement issued yesterday, termed the decision of the Allies to meet all factions of the Russians, including the Bolsheviki, as "deplorable," and as a "mistake."

"The Supreme Council of the Peace Conference has announced its Russian policy," he said. "We all look with great expectations to the work of the Peace Conference, and therefore it is painful to state that the Russian policy just announced by the Allies is a great disappointment to all Russian patriots and democrats.

"The fundamental fault in the allied decision regarding Russia is that they have evidently undertaken to decide the fate of Russia without consulting the Russians themselves. There is in existence the so-called 'Soviet Russia,' and Russia proper. The Bolshevist Soviets control a part of Central Russia with about 40,000,000 population, while the anti-Bolshevist Governments control the rest of Russia, with about 120,000,000 population, not counting Finland.

"Russia as a whole has rejected the Bolshevist rule through the Constituent Assembly elected on the basis of universal, direct, equal, and secret suffrage. The Bolsheviki dispersed the Constituent Assembly with bayonets, and even in that part of Russia where they still rule, they rule through mass terror. Not only the liberals, but also all the Socialist factions in Russia are against them. Not only the bourgeoisie, but the peasants and the workingmen as well are constantly rising against the Bolshevist rule. The Bolsheviki rule over the starving population through the Red Guards and the Red Army, bodies of well-paid and well-fed men.

Asks Whom Allies Consulted.

"Against this 'Soviet Russia,' which is but a band of criminals, controlling a part of Russia's territory by 'holdup' means, stands real Russia, a united front of all the liberal and socialist forces in Russia, waging war against the Bolsheviki as enemies of the Russian democracy and democracy throughout the world. Whom did the Allies consult before making their recent decision with regard to the Russian policy?
